Chance for cash coming

By KIRK MITCHELL
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS — Douglas Burgess of Twin Falls, your $3,357 check is in the mail.

Adolf Neilson, you have $1,823 coming to you.

Ralph Newberry, your $50 is on the way.

And City Councilman Rick Carr, you are entitled to $24.

These are just a few local residents who are entitled to valuables they did not know about, said Becky Kloer, the state's unclaimed property facilitator.

Forgotten in time could be huge bank deposits, piles of stock certificates or Grandpa's old silver coin collection, and the rightful owners could claim the loot if only they knew it existed.

Kloer, whose position was created last August, said she will be at Twin Falls' Blue Lakes Mall May 25 with a list of 64,000 people entitled to cash or valuables – in some cases windfalls such as an $80,000 check recently sent to an Idaho resident.

Unclaimed property includes abandoned bank accounts and safe deposit boxes, stock certificates, refund checks and other property turned over by businesses and state agencies. The state is required to hold property indefinitely.

Some of the stock or money has been held by the state in trust for decades, Kloer said.

Storm pummels Jerome, Buhl

By CRAIG LINCOLN
Times-News writer

JEROME – A severe thunderstorm pounded Jerome with several inches of hail, flooded gutters in Buhl and darkened skies throughout the Magic Valley Wednesday.

"This is probably the worst hailstorm I've seen," said Bob Ohlensehlen, Jerome County extension agent. "I'd say we had upwards of 4 inches of hail over here."

The storm dumped enough rain on Buhl to flood some intersections and uprooted a fence in Twin Falls.

"It took out about 40 feet of my fence, and took it over and laid it down by the new swimming pool," said Al Osborne of 1446 Wilmore Ave.

For two days, the Magic Valley has been cringing under severe thunderstorm warnings. Tuesday's weather brought mostly wind, but Wednesday's clouds unleashed hail and downpours.

"We're fortunate that this happened in this time of year," Ohlensehlen said.

The hail might damage recently sprouted sugar beets and will probably have a "significant impact" on alfalfa nearing its first cutting, he said. But the storm could have been devastating if it struck later in the season, he said.

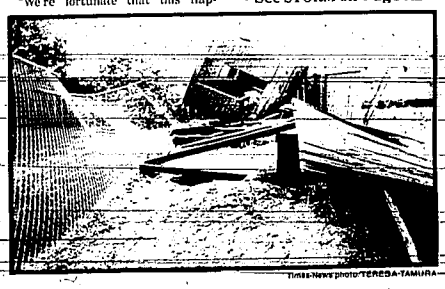

"We had two spells of it," Ohlensehlen said. "The first of it was marble size, and the duration wasn't as long. When the smaller stuff came down, it was virtually a sheet."

"When I came home after 5 p.m. there were places where it was piled 5 inches deep," he said.

The National Weather Service also reported hail in Buhl, Gooding and north of Hagerman. In Bellevue, a half-inch of rain fell in 30 minutes and the Jerome County Sheriff's Department reported a funnel cloud west of its office.

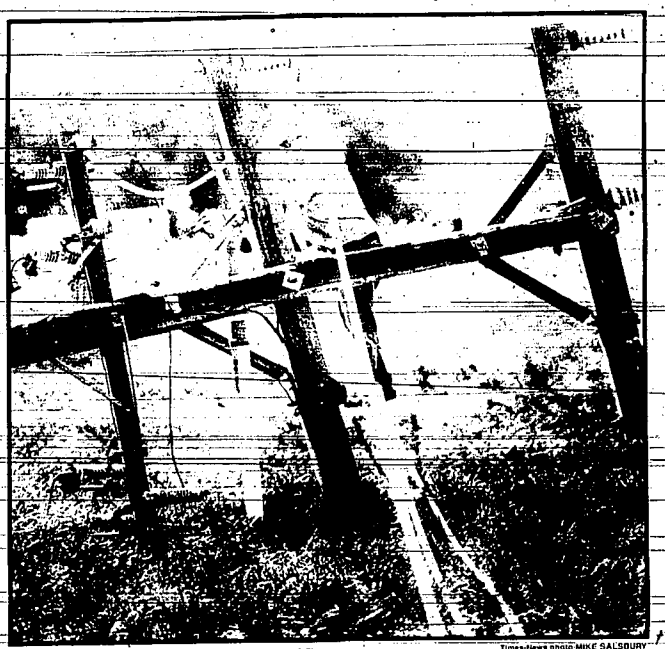

Six to 8 inches of water covered a

Panama nullifies election after attack on opposition candidate

The Associated Press

PANAMA CITY, Panama — The Panamanian government late Wednesday nullified the presidential election after its candidate and the opposition both claimed victory.

The opposition candidate was also beaten by government supporters.

Government television announced at 9:55 p.m. MDT that the elections had been nullified because of incidents that began after the voting ended on Sunday.

In Washington, the Bush administration on Wednesday accused Panama's leader Manuel Antonio Noriega of "blatant attempts at intimidation" and of responsibility for violence against opposition leaders but wouldn't say how the United States might respond.

White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said President Bush "condemned the violence now under way in Panama," including an attack on opposition presidential candidate Guillermo Endara.

Fitzwater said Noriega thwarted the desire of the people of Panama for democracy "by conducting a fraudulent election.... He has now escalated this to include violence against opposition leaders, including Mr. Endara."

Endara was injured when attacked while leading protesters accusing the government of stealing the elections, witnesses and victims said.

Officials said one of Endara's bodyguards was killed and four soldiers were wounded in an ensuing exchange of gunfire.

One of Endara's two vice-presidential candidates, Guillermo Ford, was arrested, opposition leaders said.

The three candidates were leading a motorcade through the capital when they were attacked by civilians wearing "Dignity Battalion" T-shirts, witnesses and victims said.

Several opposition officials, including the three candidates, were beaten and injured, none seriously.

Armed civilian Noriega supporters, often members of paramilitary "Dignity Battalions," have frequently taken part in breaking up opposition demonstrations.

"They bent me in the head with an iron bar," said Endara in a brief hospital interview. "I saw Arias on the ground with me."

He was referring to first vice-presidential candidate Ricardo Arias Calderon.

Arias Calderon told The Associated Press Ford had been arrested and taken to an undetermined location. He said earlier that Ford was safe.

Witnesses said some of the candidates' bodyguards leaped out of cars and fired at the attackers.

The incident took place at a Defense Forces blockade, and opposition bodyguards shot four soldiers, said Defense Forces spokesman Capt. Eduardo Lim Yueng. He said a second lieutenant was critically injured.

Fitzwater said Bush tried to call Endara in the hospital, where he appeared before reporters in a wheelchair, but could not reach him.

Bush received a first-hand account on the deteriorating situation in Panama from the U.S. ambassador there in a late afternoon phone call, Fitzwater said.

He said "reported harassment of U.S. servicemen" was one of the topics of discussion.

"The president also contacted the leadership of other countries with interests in the region," Fitzwater said. "Those conversations

Arms talks to resume in June

Los Angeles Times

MOSCOW — The United States and the Soviet Union have agreed to resume their negotiations to reduce long-range nuclear weapons in mid-June, ending a six-month freeze imposed by the new Bush administration, U.S. and Soviet officials said Wednesday.

The decision to resume the Strategic Arms Reduction Talks, or START, was the main tangible result of a day of talks between Secretary of State James A. Baker III and Soviet officials that also produced a glimmer of hope for U.S.-Soviet cooperation in ending Third World conflicts from the Middle East to Central America.

"We are very pleased with the way things started," Baker told reporters midway through the first day of his first visit to the Soviet Union.

The spokesman for the Soviet foreign ministry, Gennady I. Gerasimov, said the Kremlin had high hopes for the talks, and welcomed the Americans' new emphasis on Third World trouble spots.

"Dealing with regional problems will enable us to get the last of the Cold War behind us," he said.

At the same time, however, Gerasimov expressed the Soviet government's impatience with the Bush administration's slow approach to arms control, and jumped the gun on Baker by publicly announcing the agreement to resume the START talks a day before U.S. officials expected.

"We think our negotiators have had enough holidays," Gerasimov said. "We have lost a lot of time. While diplomats are on vacation, arms are piling up. We understand the specifics of the U.S. political system, but we regret the time lost. We have lost six months."

The Reagan administration negotiated the outline of a strategic arms agreement with the Soviet Union last year, agreeing on a reduction of roughly 50 percent in intercontinental ballistic missiles and nuclear-armed manned bombers.

But the Bush administration called off the scheduled resumption of the talks on Feb. 15, saying it needed more time to decide what new mobile missiles to build and to settle on a negotiating strategy.

Anxiety, not heart trouble, causes some chest pains

The Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Thousands of people with perfectly healthy hearts are living as virtual "cardiac cripples" because of chest pains caused by untreated anxiety or panic disorders, a researcher says.

They avoid exertion and fear they might have heart disease even after medical tests show their hearts are normal, said psychiatrist Francis Kuno Jr.

He and colleagues surveyed 371 people who had complained of chest pain or other apparent heart trouble, but who showed no sign of disease when tested with a procedure called an angiogram.

An angiogram detects narrowing of the arteries that supply blood to the heart muscle. That narrowing can set the stage for heart attack.

Despite the angiogram findings, 56 percent of the people were unsure about whether they had heart disease. Forty-five percent feared that exertion would be dangerous, and 32 percent said they were limited in physical activities.

Sixty-nine percent of the people qualified for diagnosis of panic attacks or another anxiety disorder, based on their answers to the survey, said Kane, psychiatry professor at the Baylor College of Medicine in Houston.

More than 1 million Americans have panic attacks, which inflict sudden bouts of intense terror for no apparent reason, according to the American Psychiatric Association.

About half had been told their symptoms were due

Molten rock may be stirring far below Yellowstone's surface

The Baltimore Evening Sun

BALTIMORE — Parts of Yellowstone National Park have risen by more than 3 feet since the 1920s as something, perhaps molten lava, moves into the rock beneath the Wyoming preserve.

But scientists say that there are no signs yet that the park, which was the site of several titanic volcanic explosions in prehistoric times, is getting ready to erupt again.

"I think it's 'breathing,'" said Robert B. Smith, a University of Utah geologist. He noted that terrain rising near the center of the park began to subside somewhat in 1984.

Yellowstone has not had a volcanic eruption for 70,000 years, Smith said. If one were on the way, "I would guess it would certainly have a lot of small earthquakes, and uplift of the ground before it erupted."

Smith, with U.S. Air Force Geophysics Laboratory scientists Don W. Vasco and Charles L. Taylor, reported Tuesday to the spring meeting of the American Geophysical Union in Baltimore on their investigations into the possible cause of the Yellowstone uplifting.

Taylor said that comparisons of surveys conducted during road building in the park in 1923 with new ones in the mid-1970s uncovered evidence of two major uplift "domes."

One, in the vicinity of the Old Faithful geyser, is called the Mallard Lake Dome. The other, near the Grand Canyon of the Yellowstone River, is called the Sour Creek Dome. Together, the uplifted terrain covers an area more than 45 miles long and 25 miles wide.

The areas had risen more than 2.3 feet between 1923 and the 1970s, Taylor said. They had risen another 0.8 feet when new measurements were made in 1984.

Seismic studies by the U.S. Geological Survey suggested that "something unusual was happening" under the domes, Smith said. When earthquakes rattled through the geologically active Yellowstone area, "something beneath the caldera was slowing things (the seismic waves) down."

That suggested something liquid was under there.

Calculations by Vasco, Taylor and Smith now suggest that the domes have been created by the "intrusion" of 0.21 cubic kilometers of something, 2 to 4 miles below the surface.

"We have got to be careful not to say we know what that "something" is, Smith said. But the "geological evidence" suggests either molten rock or some sort of "unusual hydrothermal activity" – hot water.

Geologists studying changes in the level of the shoreline of Yellowstone Lake, which has been tilted by the uplift, suggest that it "probably began a few thousand years ago," Smith said.

Yellowstone, of course, is world-famous for its geysers and hot springs, phenomena driven by the interaction of ground water

Golden spike driven once again

PROMONTORY, Utah (AP) — Railroad entrepreneur Leland Stanford, strangely white-haired, once again stood between steam-belching locomotives on Wednesday and drove home a gold spike that bound the nation together by rail.

Like Stanford 120 years ago, actor Sam Gordon missed on his first swing with the sledge. So did the actor portraying the Union Pacific's Thomas Durant.

"They were totally inebriated as far as we know," said John Stewart, a Utah State University historian and frock-coated member of the local troupe that annually duplicates the makeshift ceremony.

Nearly 2,000 gathered at this spot near the Great Salt Lake to watch steam locomotives come face to face to re-enact the May 10, 1869, ceremony that included a silver sledge and two gold and two silver spikes placed in a polished laurel-wood rail tie.

Gordon, nearly 80 and a teetotaler, has played Stanford since 1961 and co-directs the 18-member cast. He apologized for his snow-white mane.

"I feel kind of bad because Leland Stanford had black hair" and was 45 at the time, Gordon said. "I thought it was okay because Leland got older, too."

Just as in 1869, Durant retired to his private rail car with a headache before re-emerging to take his turn with the sledge.

"They were all pretty liquored up when they got here and they were railroad entrepreneurs, not workers. So they missed on their first tries," said Richard Felt, a cast member.

Once the ceremonial spikes were placed, another sledge and spike, both attached to the telegraph wire, were used to alert a waiting nation that the 1,776-mile line was finished.

Wednesday's re-enactment was the tenth since a logistical snafu postponed the inaugural run of two black-red-and-gold, full-sized replicas of the eastbound Jupiter and westbound 119.

The two replicas remained stranded in their nearby storage shed for the 1979 ceremony because a crew laying 1.7 miles of new track didn't finish until two months after the ceremony.

Every re-enactment since has included the two locomotives, which cost $750,000 each and were the first steam engines built in the United States in a quarter century. They are fired up each day for visitors. The 34-ton originals were unceremoniously scrapped in the early 1900s.

"The last rail is laid! The last spike is driven! The Pacific Railroad is completed!" read the telegram from Durant and Stanford to President Ulysses S. Grant.

Stanford was a former governor of California and president of the Central Pacific Railroad. He later represented California in the U.S. Senate.

til someone claims it," Kloer said.

People whose names are not on the list could also be legally entitled to claims if ancestors died without leaving wills.

Kloer said she finished on Wednesday the historical documentation needed to confirm that Idahoan Pamily Mefford qualifies for $2,000 that was left in her grandmother's bank account.

Several stock certificates dating back to the 1920s are interesting historical documents, but it would be difficult to cash them in since the companies are defunct, Kloer said.

She said people don't know the money or stocks exist for several reasons. Not uncommonly, a grandmother will open a bank account or buy stocks for grandchildren and die without telling them.

It is also a result of a mobile society. Often when people move, mailed checks including uncashed state income tax checks never get to them. Eventually the checks are sent to Kloer's office.

Once Kloer tracks down the rightful owners or they come to her, they must fill out vouchers that will entitle them to the money. Kloer can be reached at 334-2723.

Even when she discovers where a person is living, Kloer has had difficulty getting money to them. Kloer said she has had the hardest time trying to give $24,000 to former Boise resident Edna L. VanSant. Phoning and writing VanSant at her Casper, Wyo., home has been unsuccessful.

Last year, the state gave back $450,000 in cash and more than 45,000 stock shares. A lot of other items, often found in safe deposit boxes including an old baby's bottle and a lock of hair, have also been returned, Kloer said.

This year, because of her full-time status and better tracking procedures, Kloer hopes to give out more than $1 million.

She said for some people, the revelation that they have money coming to them can be shocking.

rand west of Buhl, the service reported, and telephone lines and trees were blown down throughout the valley.

Power outages were reported throughout the Magic and Wood River valleys, said Dile Monson, Idaho Power Co. electrical superintendent. One outage cut electricity for about 30 minutes to about 1,500 customers in the southeast part of Twin Falls and Kimberly, he said.

Winds were steady at 35 mph with gusts to 50 mph at KMVT-TV with visibility near zero around 5 p.m.

"It was pretty exciting for a while," said Les Cochran, Buhl police chief. "It was refreshing – the desert's blowing in and it smells good."

The Weather Service is predicting variable clouds with a chance of showers and thundershowers today. Temperatures will be in the mid-50s to mid-60s with winds of 10 mph to 20 mph.

related to Latin American unity in fuging the blatant attempts at intimidation now being conducted by the Noriega regime."

"This action underscores that General Noriega does not have the interests of the Panamanian people at heart," Fitzwater said.

He declined to say how the United States might respond.

Bush discussed the situation at the White House in a hastily called afternoon meeting of his national security advisers.

A senior official, speaking on condition he not be identified by name, told reporters the administration didn't want to signal what actions might be taken or when. As for possible military action or increasing U.S. forces in Panama, the official said he wouldn't comment on any military actions but that U.S. forces would be prepared to take whatever action might be necessary.

Meanwhile, the U.S. military's Southern Command, responding to reports of violence in Panama City, upgraded an alert to a level meaning servicemen and their families should "limit all movement ... should not go into public areas in Panama except for essential business."

No other special precautions or troop movements have been ordered, Pentagon officials said.

In Panama, Panamanian defense forces detained three American soldiers for three hours because they were taking pictures in the vicinity of a car carrying Noriega, said Mercedes Morris, a spokeswoman for the Southern Command.

In a separate incident, two U.S. military attaches, both Army majors, were detained by Panamanian defense forces during an opposition demonstration, according to a U.S. official who declined to be identified.

Iran hired Palestinian faction to blast Flight 103, CIA thinks

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — A Central Intelligence Agency assessment of the Pan Am Flight 103 bombing has concluded that Iran hired a Damascus-based radical Palestinian faction to carry out the operation.

But the Federal Bureau of Investigation does not have sufficient evidence for a legal indictment, according to sources.

The sources also said the FBI is investigating the possiblity that one of two female American college students who had Arab boyfriends may have unwittingly carried the bomb aboard the flight.

A State Department official said the CIA is "confident" of its assessment that Iran in effect "hired" elements belonging to Ahmed Jibril's Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine-General Command to carry out the bombing. But, officials said, they do not have sufficient evidence to even brief other governments on their findings. A CIA spokesman declined to comment.

Jibril and senior aides had at least one meeting with Iranian officials in Tehran last fall and possibly an earlier one immediately after the USS Vincennes shot down an Iranian Airbus over the Persian Gulf last July 3, according to these sources.

"They're fairly confident of their information," said one U.S. official familar with the interagency deliberations over the bombing.

"But they apparently don't have enough information to satisfy everybody inside the administration," he added. "The FBI has to deal with evidence they can present in court."

"Intelligence work and criminal work are two different things. You have to be able to present evidence to a grand jury for an indictment," explained one FBI official. "We're not at that stage now."

The West German magazine Quick reported Monday that Iran's religious leader, Ayatolloh Ruhollah Khomeini, had met with his advisers last July after the downing of the Airbus, which resulted in the death of 290 people, to plot revenge.

Quick gave no indication which of the many rival Iranian factions attended the alleged meeting, or whether Iran's powerful Parliament speaker Ali Akbar Hashemi Rafsanjani was present.

The magazine, which said it had obtained secret minutes of that meeting, said Iran had paid $1.3 million to Jibril to carry out the bombing of an American airliner.

A State Department official said "we don't have anything hard on that." But he added that Iran was always "in the background" of various assumptions and assessments of which country might have been responsible for the Pan Am bombing.

"Everybody is pretty much convinced it was the PFLP, but they don't have the definitive proof about it," the official added.

Quick magazine also quoted Oliver B. Revell, deputy FBI director, as saying in an interview that "our investigating officials believe the explosive came into the plane in Frankfurt." Revell added, "That does not mean that the bomb could not have been on a connecting flight to Frankfurt."

FBI spokesman William Carter confirmed that this was "the gist" of what Revell had said during an interview about Western efforts to combat terrorism.

In the interview, Revell also said: "I am quite sure that in the end we will know for sure how the bomb got onto the plane and who put it there and we can start criminal proceedings against them."

The two American college students being studied as possible unwitting couriers had been attending a university in a neutral country, according to one source, and were headed home for the Christmas holidays.

Investigators have also refined their estimate of the size of the bomb. After conducting tests to determine the explosive force of the plastic explosives, they now believe the bomb weighed 1\ pounds.

to stress, but only 4 percent were told to seek mental health treatment and only 17 percent were given tranquilizers, Kane said.

He spoke in an interview before presenting the study at the annual meeting of the American Psychiatric Association.

In a telephone interview, cardiologist Adolph Hutter of Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston said anxiety and stress are not the only possible explanations for chest pain in people with normal angiogram results.

More common causes in his professional experience, he said, are a spasm in the esophagus, the muscular tube leading from the pharynx to the stomach, or a tenderness of cartilage in the chest wall.

About 540,000 angiograms were performed in 1984, and the annual total has probably risen since, Kane said. About 10 percent to 45 percent of such tests find no sign of heart disease, he said.

In Kane's study, 90 percent of the patients had suffered chest pain before the angiogram and a third had been hospitalized for it. About a third had complained of breathing difficulties, and smaller fractions had reported feelings of suffocation, palpitations, dizziness or sweating.

At the time they were surveyed, eight months to 18 months after the angiograms, 76 percent reported they still had chest pain, and 37 percent said they were still seeing a doctor because of it.

Symptoms of chest pain, palpitation, breathlessness and fear of fainting tended strongly to be reported by people who also appeared to suffer from panic attacks, the survey showed.

The survey also found that generalized anxiety disorder was linked to persistent chest pain and belief that one had suffered a heart attack. Fifty-five percent believed they had suffered a heart attack.

with hot rock and volcanic magma that lies close to the surface in northwestern Wyoming.

The entire 2.2 million-acre park lies within what geologists call the "Yellowstone caldera," the collapsed remains of an ancient but active volcano. Three times in the recent geological past — 2 million years ago, 1.2 million years ago and 600,000 years ago — the Yellowstone volcano has erupted in cataclysmic explosions. A small eruption took place 70,000 years ago, and the region continues to experience thousands of small earthquakes per year, more than any site in the Rocky Mountains.

The most recent cataclysmic explosion, 600,000 years ago, threw an estimated 3,500 cubic kilometers of debris into the air, Smith said. That is about 3,000 times as much debris as was moved by the explosive 1980 eruption of Mount St. Helens in Washington state.

Debris from that Yellowstone eruption has been found in deposits as far away as Kansas, Texas and the Gulf of Mexico, Smith said.

No one knows when the next big Yellowstone eruption is likely. The timing of the last three explosive eruptions suggests that they come roughly every 600,000 years, the last one 600,000 years ago.

NBC vows to run 'Roe vs. Wade' movie without ads if necessary

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC has asked advertisers to buck pressure groups and support the controversial abortion movie "Roe Vs. Wade," scheduled to air Monday, and vows to run the movie without advertising if necessary.

In a May 8 letter to advertisers, NBC President Robert C. Wright said NBC was proud of the critically praised movie, a fact-based drama about the case that led to the 1973 Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion.

"I'm not writing this letter to simply sell commercial time," Wright said in the letter. "We will underwrite this project without support, if necessary. We're very proud of 'Roe Vs. Wade.'"

Wright's letter said advertisers should be concerned about boycott threats being used as a way of controlling program content.

Water supplies should be ongoing concern

Two articles in Wednesday's Times-News should cause us all to pause and think about the importance of groundwater in the valley and what we might be doing to protect and preserve it.

The first story was about people in the Hagerman area who have had to resort to hauling water for their domestic use because of a precipitous drop in the levels in their domestic wells.

The second was a column by former Jerome resident Scott Hyder on the potential contamination of the groundwater from solvents dumped over a 12-year period by Tupperware.

To some extent, water issues locally have risen or fallen in the community's consciousness with the availability. In good years, when supplies are high, water concerns are not as great. But in drought years, when reserves are low, there is enormous discussion about both supply and demand.

This kind of year-to-year thinking about water is understandable, but the two articles emphasize the precious nature of the commodity.

In the first report, domestic users, who draw off shallow wells, are losing both volume and pressure as deeper agricultural wells are taking more of the groundwater for crop watering.

In the second, a groundwater aquifer is in danger of serious contamination by a dumping practice which, in retrospect, was convenient but whose long-term consequences were either unknown or ignored.

Idaho water law and practice has been shaped by a tradition of both minimal regulation and priority of rights and ownership. That legal and practical framework has served the state reasonably well in the past.

But the world is more complex today than it was when the Magic Valley was first settled and water concerns were simpler. There are more competing demands for its use and the potential for contamination has increased.

Reflecting those changed conditions, the state Legislature, the Environmental Protection Agency and the state Division of Water Quality have all increased their roles in trying to monitor and resolve issues for which there are no easy answers.

Distorted logic stirs up abortion issue

Brenda Larsen

This letter is a response to a recent column by the Rev. Tim Baker, Hailey, who purported to lend the authority of logic and science to the abortion debate.

He wrote that "To say that it (a fetus) is not a child at conception is logically, scientifically and biologically dishonest. If it is not completely a human being at conception, then it never is one".

According to the logic of the Reverend, we shall now have to say that an acorn is an oak tree, an egg is a chicken, and perhaps that a baby is really an old man.

After all, if a thing has the potential to become something, then it must already be that thing, right? This may be the divine logic of the Reverend, but it is not the logic which scientists and logicians use.

As a matter of fact, scientists (and ordinary people too) have long recognized that the passage of time radically alters the status of all things.

To represent the changing of a thing in time, we call it by different words. Thus, "seed" refers to one thing; "seedling" to another, and "mature plant" to another.

Few of us will want to insist that these are the same thing, and fewer still will act as if they are. I know full well that I cannot cook up my spinach seed into a lunch.

Similarly, it would be unreasonable of me to mourn the blastocyst which failed to implant itself in my uterus as a dead child. The spinach seeds are surely my potential lunches and dinners, but until I plant them, cultivate and nurture them, and find them to have survived the vagaries of the weather, they are not spinach leaves.

A zygote, a blastocyst, an embryo; these are not "children," and the fact that we have separate terms for these stages of development indicates that they represent meaningful distinctions.

Just as the Reverend would ignore the distinction between an acorn and an oak tree, so he fails to see the difference between a "cold-blooded killer" and a troubled woman.

We do not, in fact, view the woman who has had an abortion as a threat to humanity, like a Ted Bundy, or a hillside strangler. Most of us don't fear or even condemn her. We feel sorrow that she found herself in such a miserable dilemma.

The Reverend, his compassionate nature notwithstanding, seems to be advocating above all an aggressive and hostile stance towards those who fail to see his "logic."

His claim that abortion is "cold-blooded, premeditated murder" is worse than nonsense; it is inflammatory, irresponsible, and insulting to women and their doctors.

I respect the right of anyone to disapprove and argue against abortion. There are powerful arguments to be made on both sides of the issue.

What I object to in the Reverend's column is his misleading people with an absurd logic and an ignorance of science, and his vicious verbal assaults on women and their doctors.

None of us is the wiser from reading this man's opinion.

SWEEPING VICTORY

Keep commodity market, regulations under U.S. control

Pam Baldwin

Today, the future of many Idaho jobs and its farm economy are on the table at the GATT (General Agreement on Tariff and Trade) negotiations in Geneva, yet most people are unaware of these talks.

Not only would discussions in Switzerland affect us in Idaho, but they could profoundly influence the power of Congress to create public policy on our behalf, particularly farm policy in the 1990 farm bill.

Recently, the Bush Administration, through Secretary of Agriculture Clayton Yeutter, has made it clear it would like to remove farm policy from the hands of Congress and turn it over to appointed GATT trade negotiators.

It is this threat, and the specific directions of the GATT negotiations, that has caused farm groups from around the country to react sharply to the U.S. position.

Commodity groups have been in the lead working with organizations like the National Family Farm Coalition, of which the Idaho Rural Council is an active participant, the League of Rural Voters and the National Farmers Union, who understand the severe damage these measures would impose on their members—i.e. sugar, dairy, beef, wool, honey, and wheat producers among others.

GATT is a multi-country agreement on the conduct of all international trading corporations, not only a series of agricultural negotiations. It was set up in 1947 by the United States and 22 other countries and now covers 90 percent of world trade. Today, however, agricultural trade is at the top of its agenda and the U.S. proposal could have severe consequences for farmers throughout the country and in Idaho.

Take the sugarbeet industry, a major source of income for Idaho. In 1987, sugarbeets generated a gross farm income of more than $160 million in Idaho.

The sugar program is not subsidized by the federal government. The commodity brings in decent prices for its producers and maintains reasonable prices for consumers.

Additionally, sugar is important to a number of developing countries who export to the United States, within quota limits, posing no hardship to our own industry.

If the GATT negotiators sign-off on an agreement similar to the one proposed by the U.S., our ability to control sugar (and other) imports would be eliminated.

Brazil, with cheap labor and unregulated farming practices, could capture the lion's share of the U.S. sugar market displacing Idaho family farmers and small producers in developing nations. Within Brazil, the drive to maintain that market would undoubtedly provide greater pressure to destroy its rain forests for farm land.

In Idaho, the loss of the sugarbeet industry could force the sugarbeet plants in Nampa, Paul, Twin Falls, and neighboring Nyssa, Oregon to close.

Sugarbeet farmers would be forced to shift into other crops, which could disrupt other segments of Idaho agriculture, overload the market and lower prices.

But the GATT negotiations may include an even more startling consequence. Secretary Yeutter, who formerly served as the chief U.S. trade representative under Reagan, has recently asserted that U.S. farm policy will take a back seat to trade agreements reached internationally. Specifically, he has cautioned Congress not to spend much time on the 1990 farm bill because, within a year of its passage, it may become obsolete by the provisions of GATT.

In farm policy, as in all issues, we believe that Congress should keep important domestic policy decisions within the political process where the public may have input and where elected officials are accountable.

Congress has not been a participant in the GATT negotiations but its members will be expected to exercise a single up or down vote on the agreement as a whole with no ability to modify the agricultural, or any other, segment. That is a far cry from the sector by sector discussion of farm policy needed to protect the food security of our nation.

It comes as no surprise that the original authors and chief promoters of these proposals are the multinational agricultural conglomerates who recently have found declining support for their ideas in Congress. As a result, they now seek to control farm policy by circumventing legislative solutions and working at the international level.

The importance of the GATT negotiations cannot be minimized. The Idaho Rural Council would urge Congress to stand tough in its defense of U.S. agricultural interests.

We also ask readers to urge our Congressional delegation to take a firm stand with our trade negotiators if we are to protect the interests of Idaho agriculture and retain our role in developing the best domestic farm policy for our entire industry.

Pam Baldwin, Meridian, is president of the Idaho Rural Council, whose office is at Box 88, Carey, Idaho 83320, 726-4553.

Humane Society helps us all

To Marta Moyle:

I feel that you have left out some very important information while expressing your opinion on Animal Rights Groups. I consider it very misleading to the public to lump all Humane Societies and animal rights groups into one and the same category.

Our country has many Animal Welfare Organizations founded for a wide variety of reasons and needs. The Humane Society of the United States recently wrote an editorial criticizing the actions of some militant Animal Rights groups. The American Humane Association and the ASPCA would most likely prefer that the public judge them on their own merits as they have been in existence for nearly 100 years.

I volunteer a lot of my time for the local Humane Society. Our goals include education on pet care and the prevention of cruelty to animals. The reason any Humane Society has to kill dogs or cats is because "Pet Owners" do not accept their responsibility to spay or neuter their pets. Every year 90 million cats and dogs are born. 45 million of these pets are considered strays (unwanted by anyone).

Until each pet owner accepts his responsibility to prevent unwanted litters, each community will remain morally obligated to euthanize the surplus of pets by any humane method.

Your suggestion to buy land and food for this exponential growth of the pet population is totally absurd. One dog and its offspring in six years can produce 4,500 dogs.

Animals were not put on this earth to be "used" as a resource. The destruction of the 14,000,000 surplus pets can hardly be pollution free as you mentioned. Where do you think the carcasses from the local animal shelters end up?

Finally, I would like to invite you to see what your local Humane Society is all about. We will be giving lectures on Companion Animals at the Twin Falls High School Sophomore Biology classes May 15, 16, and 18.

Welcome, Jerome dairymen

As a farmer in Jerome County and a resident just a mile or two west of five good sized dairy operations, I would like to take the opportunity to express my gratitude to the dairy ranchers.

They have provided excellent markets for my alfalfa, barley, and silage corn. They have also created a resource of fertilizer that has created phenomenal potash, phosphate, and humus levels in my soil samples.

I also appreciate the pride these ranchers in Jerome take in the appearance of their operations.

To me, a good dairy operation represents the American dream: Excellent rewards for their hard-working industry and thrift. Welcome to my neighborhood, progressive dairymen.

Garbage pickup could be free

How much were you charged for garbage pick-up last month? How would you like to reduce that cost to zero?

The city of Davis, California has free garbage pick-up to those who are willing to sort their own garbage.

They sort the glass by color, the newspapers and cardboard in bundles, and the aluminum. This enables the city to sell the sorted products to defer the cost of the garbage disposal for the city. Those who cooperate are then not charged as a reward for the successful refuse management.

The overabundance of garbage has not reached Southern Idaho and many of us have not been concerned because of an abundance of cheap land now available for dumping.

Plastics and styrofoam are everyday offenders that are often overlooked. Disposable diapers, broken glass and chemicals are also creating havoc today.

Glass can be recycled by the individual or by cities eliminating the problem of non-biodegrading glass in our landfills. Plastics and styrofoam do not biodegrade into the soil as paper does. When incinerated they pollute the air we breathe as well as the soil and the water.

Chemical use has become rampant. Agriculture, the largest culprit, scarcely used chemicals until after World War II. Farmers then became the market for excess chemicals manufactured.

Individuals could recycle their own wastes or participate in a community project. County landfills as well as city garbage removal systems could become profitable entities with the cooperation of those who utilize them.

Other states such as Oregon have mandatory recycling laws. We in Idaho should be able to manage our wastes sensibly without the use of such laws if we establish disposal systems that are voluntary and profitable.

TV promo was in poor taste

It's too bad that KMVT is associating with CBS's poor taste in TV movies and commercials. Had Lee Wagner known about this, I am almost positive he would have pushed his tape delay button.

The movie will have aired by the time this letter is published. While I haven't seen the movie, I did happen to see the promo that aired last Tuesday, May 2nd, and that's what I am writing about. Only, I saw it on Monday the 8th. (Otherwise I would have written sooner).

The only reason I saw the promo at all, was because we had taped "Guts and Glory: The Rise and Fall of Oliver North".

The promo aired between the movie and the news. As usual promo formats go, there were a lot of little clips here and there creating excitement and intrigue.

Had I not had it on video tape, I would have thought I imagined what I saw. But when I went back and replayed it in slow and stop motion, there it was big as life.

The scene was a man's mouth caressing a woman's breast. While I have no objection to this between adults in real life, I find this distasteful in family TV viewing.

Now I could change the channel as some proponents suggest, but of course I have to know it is coming up before I can do such an act. The fiction of Max Headroom and TV ratings are becoming important and a reality in this society. "BlipVerts" (subliminal pictures shown at a very fast rate without making the viewer conscious) are also apparent.

Even though it was shown at about 9:07 p.m., not all children and young adults are in bed.

Now I haven't heard or read anything about the promo, or if they plan to leave this scene in the movie, but if they do, I am sure that more will be said.

Is the television industry slowly sneaking more sex into our viewing time? I don't see how they could do anymore without doing what I am talking about. And that is getting down and dirty and back all.

I realize Judge Hurlbutt would rule it constitutional. ("Objection! Speculation. Sustained.")

I was hoping that TV was going the other direction, by leaving the imagination to the audience in some areas.

Besides my wife as witness to this, I also have saved the tape, just in case somebody wants to sue me for libel or some trumped-up charge.

House panel rejects Bush S&L bailout, adopts alternative

WASHINGTON (AP) — House tax-writers rejected President Bush's savings and loan bailout plan Wednesday, approving an alternative that threatens to swell the federal deficit over the next three years by $43 billion to $50 billion and possibly force a veto showdown with the White House.

The House Ways and Means Committee, with 2 of 13 Republicans joining its 23 Democrats, voted 25-11 to include the government's full $50 billion share of the most massive corporate bailout in history in the fiscal 1989, 1990 and 1991 budgets.

"This is the first step in ending the period of Ronald Reagan's period of blue smoke and mirrors," said the committee's chairman, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill..

The vote was the first major setback for Bush's bailout plan, which moved through the Senate and the House Banking Committee with only minor changes in response to repeated administration vows of a veto if it was altered.

Voting with the 23 Democrats to scuttle Bush's financing plan were two Republicans, Reps. Willis Gradison of Ohio and Raymond McGrath of New York.

Bush avoided adding the cost of the S&L bailout to the federal deficit by proposing an elaborate off-budget financing scheme to raise the $50 billion through private, 30-year bonds for which taxpayers would assume most of the interest costs.

Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady spent more than an hour behind closed doors with members of the committee, trying to convince them to go along with Bush's plan and repeating earlier veto threats.

Democrats claimed their "honest budgeting" approach would save taxpayers $4.5 billion over the next three decades in paying off depositors whose money was lost through poor and often fraudulent lending practices by more than 550 now-insolvent S&Ls.

Republicans however, predicted the vote will upset a delicate "no new taxes" deficit-reducing budget agreement with the White House and delay a solution to the S&L crisis by forcing a Bush veto of the legislation.

"We've fairly well destroyed the budget agreement between the administration and Congress," complained Rep. Bill Frenzel, R-Minn.

Assistant Treasury Secretary David Mullins acknowledged that the committee's vote opened a "gaping hole" in the administration's proposal but added that the action "is not the final verdict."

But Rep. Charles Schumer, D-N.Y., an early proponent of including the S&L bailout's costs in the budget, said the committee's action Wednesday has breathed new life into a once-abandoned effort to challenge Bush on the issue.

"The Democratic caucus is pretty much on board now that Ways and Means has said it wants this on the budget," Schumer said. "I think the odds are 70 percent to 80 percent that we'll win on the House floor."

Both plans effectively waive the cost of cleaning up the S&L mess from the Gramm-Rudman law requiring a reduction in the federal deficit to less than $100 billion for the next fiscal year beginning in October.

Bush's proposal gets around the deficit-reduction requirements by borrowing the $50 billion through a new off-budget government corporation and including only the $3.5 billion in interest costs as part of the 1989, 1990 and 1991 budgets.

The Ways and Means measure allows the budget deficit to swell by $9 billion this year, $22 billion in 1990 and $12 billion in 1991, according to White House Budget Director Richard Darman, through direct borrowing by the Treasury.

However, the committee's plan exempts those amounts from the Gramm-Rudman deficit-reduction targets.

But Prenzel complained that "once the credit markets understand that we are willing to breach Gramm-Rudman, they will understand that we are willing to breach it for toxic waste cleanups, homelessness or whatever comes down the pike."

The budget resolutions approved last week would reduce this year's $160 billion deficit to just over $99 billion, meeting a Gramm-Rudman reduction target of $100 billion.

But neither the House nor the Senate plan reflected most of the bailout's costs, assuming it would be handled "off budget" as Bush proposed.

While Bush's plan prevented the cost of solving the S&L crisis from showing up on the budget, it also swelled the overall costs to taxpayers because higher interest rates would have to be paid on the borrowed $50 billion.

Cheney defends FSX deal before senators

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Dick Cheney defended the proposed $7 billion FSX warplane deal with Japan on Wednesday as the Senate Foreign Relations Committee took up a resolution to disapprove the controversial coproduction arrangement.

Addressing charges that the deal will give the Japanese vital U.S. technology, Cheney told the committee:

"We are not giving them unrestricted access to all the technology that goes with our capability to design and produce advanced fighter aircraft."

But Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., the committee's ranking Republican, strongly disagreed.

"The FSX program is a bad deal for America. ... The FSX will be the laboratory and training ground for the design, production, avionics and other engineering talent necessary to build a world-class Japanese civilian aircraft industry."

Both commented as the committee neared a vote on a resolution of disapproval. Even if the resolution passes the House and the Senate, a two-thirds majority in both houses would still be required to override a presidential veto, which would be considered likely.

Under the deal, General Dynamics would join with Japan's Mitsubishi Heavy Industries to codevelop and coproduce the FSX, an advanced version of the U.S. F-16, for deployment by Japan in the late 1990s. General Dynamics is headquartered in St. Louis, but most of the FSX work would be done at its F-16 plant in Fort Worth, Texas.

Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher, who earlier had raised concerns within the administration over economic implications of the FSX deal, told the committee: "I am confident that this agreement will not harm the economic security interests of the United States."

Cheney, asked about how solid he views a promise by the Japanese that approximately 40 percent of the production work on the FSX would be handled by U.S. companies, replied, "We think that it's solid — as solid as it can be."

Proponents of the FSX deal have argued that it will give the United States valuable "flowback" of Japanese technology involving composite wing construction and phased-array radars.

But Sen. Alan J. Dixon, D-Ill., said a report by the General Accounting Office, an investigative arm of Congress, has already concluded that these technologies are well known to U.S. aerospace companies.

"The evidence clearly before us is that we're really not getting anything in return," Dixon said.

Sen. Alphonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., called the technology flowback argument "total nonsense and a facade to cover up the shortcomings of this deal."

Distraught man buzzes Boston, fires at people

BOSTON (AP) — A distraught man who allegedly had just killed his ex-wife commandeered a small plane and held the city hostage for three hours early Wednesday, firing a semiautomatic weapon while flying within 50 feet of motorists and buildings.

"We could do nothing but wait and try to guess where he was going to land," airport spokesman Phil Orlandella said. "We could only have made things worse by going up and chasing him."

Traffic controllers at Logan International Airport said the pilot buzzed them repeatedly, forcing officials to close the facility for an hour and reroute several late-night flights. Controllers fled the tower twice.

"We have a very thick handbook on the rules of air traffic control, but there's nothing in there about what to do if a maniac comes shooting an AK-47 at you in the control tower," said John Leyden, a spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration in Washington.

"We didn't know if he was on drugs, drunk, or if he was suicidal," said Orlandella, of the Massachusetts Port Authority. "We had not one word of radio contact throughout the whole flight."

Alfred J. Hunter, 42, pleaded innocent Wednesday to one count each of murder and grand larceny after a midnight flight that reportedly included a dip beneath a harbor bridge. Essex County District Judge John T. Doyle ordered Hunter held without bail at Bridgewater State Hospital for 20 days of psychiatric observation.

Hunter made no comments when he was captured, police said.

Bullets struck a variety of targets, including parked cars and the Prudential tower's 50th-floor skywalk.

One pedestrian was struck by ejected casings from the spent rounds.

FAA Field Manager Richard Fontz said Hunter was not a licensed pilot but had apparently had some instruction from his father.

Couple shouldn't be charged with son's death, court told

BOSTON (AP) — A Christian Science couple who did not seek medical attention for their dying son should not be tried for manslaughter, their lawyer argued Wednesday at the state Supreme Court.

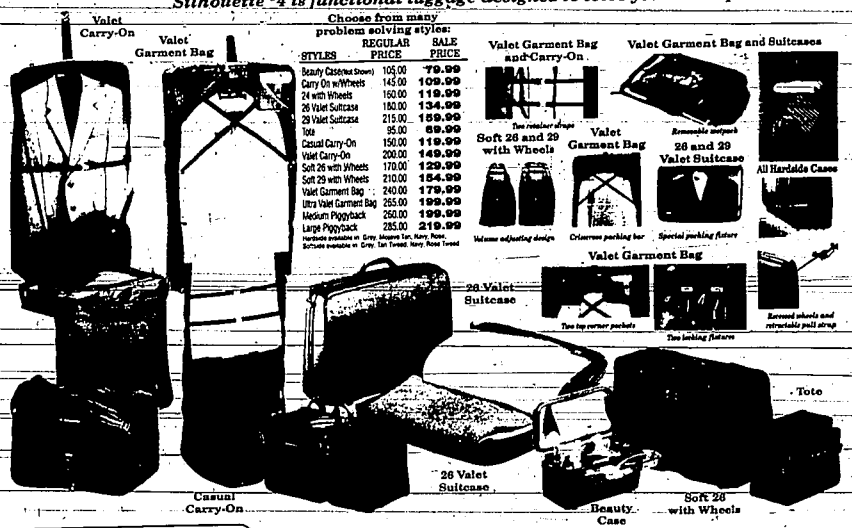

The outcome of the case is being watched closely by many of the estimated 650,000 members of the Christian Science church who shun doctors and medicine and espouse spiritual healing.

Rikki Klieman, attorney for David and Ginger Twitchell, told Judge Herbert Wilkins that state laws are so vague about such matters a trial would be unfair, and the charges should be dismissed.

A 1971 amendment to the state child abuse and neglect law recognized spiritual healing as an alternative to modern medicine. Klieman said the law gives Christian Scientists no guidance as to the point at which they must call in doctors.

"The problem is, they do not know what the law is," said Klieman. "They know they have been told by the Legislature that they will not be prosecuted for caring for their children by spiritual healing. But then they see that if something goes wrong, or when it goes to a certain point, then they get indicted for manslaughter."

House impeaches judge from Mississippi

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House on Wednesday impeached U.S. District Judge Walter L. Nixon of Mississippi, who is serving a five-year perjury sentence, and sent the case to the Senate for trial to decide whether he should be ousted from office.

The vote was 417-0.

"Let's get on with this task, unpleasant as it may be, before he returns to the bench," Rep. James Sensenbrenner, R-Wis., told the House as it acted on the third judicial impeachment case in recent years.

The three impeachment articles were sent to the Senate for a trial to determine whether Nixon will be removed from office and deprived of the $89,500 annual salary he has been collecting while serving his sentence at Eglin Air Force Base in Florida.

The Senate currently is holding an impeachment trial for U.S. District Judge Alcee L. Hastings of Florida. He was acquitted in 1983 on charges of conspiracy to receive a $150,000 bribe but lawmakers are seeking his removal anyway, saying there is ample evidence.

U.S. District Judge Harry Claiborne of Nevada was impeached by the House in 1986 while serving a tax evasion sentence and later removed from the bench by the Senate.

Nixon was convicted of perjury after denying in 1984 before both a federal grand jury and Justice Department investigators that he intervened in a narcotics case involving the son of Hattiesburg business executive Wiley Fairchild.

Nixon was acquitted of accepting an illegal gratuity in that case.

But evidence at his trial and developed in an impeachment investigation by the House was that Nixon discussed the marijuana case with then-Forrest County District Attorney Paul Holmes.

Exxon will expand oil cleanup efforts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Exxon Corp., told by the White House to pour more resources into its Alaska oil cleanup, said Wednesday it would deploy 1,600 additional workers as well as more boats and barges in the effort.

The Coast Guard commandant, Adm. Paul A. Yost Jr., told a Senate hearing that despite the increase, it will be "almost impossible" to clean all the oil from more than 300 miles of shoreline by the target date of Sept. 15.

However, Exxon USA President William D. Stevens told openly skeptical senators the company "fully expects to clean up" the beaches by that date, after which poor weather is likely to make efforts impossible.

Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner said Exxon had pledged "a substantial increase" in manpower and resources, nearly doubling the cleanup efforts by the company whose tanker spilled 11 millions of oil into Alaska waters last March.

The Exxon announcement came after company executives were told in a meeting at the White House on Monday that their summer cleanup plans were inadequate.

Skinner, who along with White House chief of staff John Sununu had met with the Exxon officials, said even with the additional resources it remains uncertain whether Exxon will be able to finish by September.

"It's a massive, massive effort. Exxon has got a big challenge," Skinner told reporters, adding that he plans to "hold their feet to the fire" to finish the job. If the cleanup is not completed in September, he said, he expects Exxon to renew the effort next spring.

Yost, of the Coast Guard, sounded pessimistic about quick results in his testimony before a Senate Commerce, Science and Transportation subcommittee.

He told of his hands dripping with oil after reaching under the gravel on a beach that had been cleaned for 10 consecutive days by 200 workers. He said increasing personnel will not prevent oil from washing back onto the beaches.

Asked by Sen. Albert Gore Jr., D-Tenn., if the oil giant was trying to "stonewall" the cleanup, Yost said, "That's one view of it. Mine would be slightly more sympathetic. I think the job is so extensive, and the damage so serious, the amount of equipment that can be operated in that weather so small" that Exxon is now doing "the most that can be done."

Secret satellites sent aloft in surprise rocket launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A powerful Titan rocket Wednesday propelled into space a secret payload believed to be a pair of advanced satellites for worldwide U.S. military and diplomatic communications.

The 16-story-tall, $65 million Titan 34D roared away from its launch pad at 1:47 p.m. MDT and appeared to be flying normally as it rumbled out over the Atlantic Ocean through a partly cloudy sky.

The Air Force did not announce the launch in advance, which has been its practice on military space flights for several years. It issued a brief post-launch statement which said only that a Titan 34D had been "launched successfully." It provided no information on the nature of the payload.

Although the Pentagon tried to keep the launch secret, it's difficult, with more than 20,000 employees working at Cape Canaveral and adjacent Kennedy Space Center, to hide the fact that a rocket that big is going to be launched.

Minutes before the Titan 34D lifted off, hundreds of workers poured out of buildings to watch.

Sources close to the project who would not be identified by name said Wednesday the Defense Satellite Communications System satellites were aboard the Titan 34D.

Bush pronounced 'in excellent health' after routine physical

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush was pronounced "in extremely sound physical condition" Wednesday after a routine medical checkup turned up no surprises and a small cyst on a finger was treated.

The examination, the first for Bush as president, showed the 64-year-old chief executive to be "in excellent health," Dr. Burton Lee, Bush's personal physician, said in a statement.

Bush himself telegraphed the results of the three-hour examination at the Bethesda Naval Medical Center by flashing a double thumbs-up sign to reporters as he stepped from his helicopter on the South Lawn of the White House.

A statement issued by the White House after his return gave the president a clean bill of health.

The statement said a "sebaceous cyst" on the middle finger of his right hand was drained. "The president is wearing a Band-Aid on the finger, which he can remove within the next few hours," Lee said. "This cyst has been present for many years and does not present a medical problem."

A sebaceous cyst is a benign growth on the skin that is often removed surgically.

"President Bush is in extremely sound physical condition," the White House statement quoted Lee as saying. It added:

"He keeps fit through a number of physical activities, which we recommend he continue on a regular basis. Today's examination shows him to be in excellent health. He has no significant symptoms related to any of his organ systems."

For exercise, Bush jogs, plays tennis, pitches horseshoes, occassionally swims and uses a stationary bicycle and indoor treadmill.

Frequent acetaminophen users risk kidney damage

BOSTON (AP) — Long-time daily users of acetaminophen, one of the nation's most popular over-the-counter painkillers, face three times the usual risk of kidney damage, a study concludes.

Acetaminophen is sold under many brand names, including Tylenol, Anacin-3 and Datril. The medicine appears to be safe when used occasionally, but was associated with kidney failure and less severe forms of the disease when taken every day for years.

While the findings raise concern about overuse of painkillers, experts cautioned that the results should be considered tentative until confirmed by other studies.

Acetaminophen abuse could be responsible for "a small but not inconsequential amount" of kidney disease among Americans, according to the study's director, Dr. Dale P. Sandler of the National Institute of Environmental Health Science.

However, she added, "This study does not demonstrate any effect for acetaminophen when taken as directed, which is when needed for symptoms, but when symptoms persist, you should seek medical advice."

Acetaminophen accounts for about 37 percent of the nation's $2.5 billion annual over-the-counter sales of pain pills, according to the consulting firm Kline & Co. Aspirin represents about 43 percent and ibuprofen 20 percent.

"Certainly there is enough suggestive evidence here to advise people to be careful if they are analgesic (painkiller) abusers," said Dr. Saulo Klahr of Washington University, president of the National Kidney Foundation.

2 physicians say all adults need a regular AIDS test

BOSTON (AP) — Doctors should encourage all their adult patients to have routine AIDS tests, even if they are not at any obvious risk of the disease, two physicians recommend in a national journal.

Their report argues that routine testing, which is simple and inexpensive, would reveal infection early so that people could be treated and that it also would increase public awareness of AIDS.

The recommendation is likely to be controversial, since most medical groups have suggested limiting testing to people at high risk of AIDS.

Testing reveals infection with HIV, the virus that causes AIDS. People may carry this virus for many years before becoming sick.

"We are recommending HIV testing vigorously to all U.S. adults under the age of 60 regardless of their reported risk history," the doctors wrote.

"Our greatest concern is to reach the great number of persons infected with HIV who are not availing themselves of any current options in testing and who are not confronting their risk for HIV infection," the doctors wrote.

The report, by Drs. Frank S. Rhame of the University of Minnesota and Dennis G. Maki of the University of Wisconsin, was published in Thursday's New England Journal of Medicine.

They said doctors should take a more active role in promoting HIV screening, although patients should have a right to refuse the test.

What's what

The bride proposed

In Sumatra, it's the bride who proposes to the groom, traditionally. Children take the mother's family name. Property passes down through the female line.

Q. Can you give CPR to a dog?

A. "Canine Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation"? Yes. Technique calls for blowing short breaths into a dog's nostrils, not its mouth.

What've I got against proof-readers? Nothing. All I said was the first governor of Alaska was Wladimierz Krzyzanowski.

ADDICT FAITH

Addicts tend to believe what their suppliers want them to believe. So says a student of the cults. Curious complicated process, not just a phenomenon of drugs. It's evident, too, in loneliness and love, in the orphaned and the widowed, and in the unhappily-married. Upshot is those who crave believe what they're told by whoever satisfies the craving.

Q. How come there aren't any photos of Abe Lincoln smiling?

A. Nobody smiled for cameras then. Exposure took too long to hold a smile.

What does "mai tai" mean to you? In Tahitian, it means "the very best."

Q. In printers' lingo, what's "bleeding"?

A. Printing to the edge of the page with no margin.

WRITER QUIZ

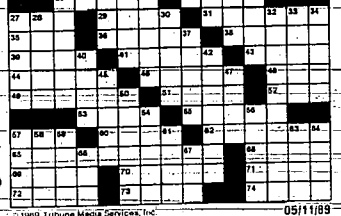

Who wrote "Caesar and Cleopatra"? Put that question to your family know-it-all for a probable comeuppance. Most people so queried say, William Shakespeare. Wrong. He wrote "Antony and Cleopatra." The Caesar one was written by George Bernard Shaw.

Domino's tames the wild morel

TRAVERSE CITY, Mich. (AP) — It was with some personal loss that Larry Lonik ate his first commercially grown morel.

Lonik has hunted the wild mushroom since he was a boy. He still becomes an excitable child, clutching his booty and scurrying among the fallen leaves, on those spring weekends when he gives mushroom hunting lessons in the north Michigan woods.

Now a Lansing company has done the unthinkable and grown wild morels in captivity. Lonik, a morel expert and mushroom consultant for Domino's Pizza Inc., gave the laboratory fungi from Neogen Corp. a try.

"It was a sadness that they were as good as the wild ones," he said.

Through Lonik, Domino's is considering buying the North American rights from Neogen for commercial morel growing. The potential profits will more than make up for any loss of Lonik's innocence.

Neogen's partners in the morel venture are Kuhn-Champignon, a Swiss mushroom producer, the Salk Institute in La Jolla, Calif., and Skandigen, a bio-technology company in Stockholm, Sweden.

Morels, meaty-flavored mushrooms akin in popularity and propagation to truffles, are selling for as much as $320 a pound dried on the world market. Fresh ones can't even be had outside the short spring season, since the only morel suppliers are wild mushroom hunters.

One such hunter, Larry Stone of Frankfort, Mich., combs the woods for the sponge-like mushroom to sell to local restaurants.

"Someday, they'll crack the secret of the morel," Stone mused after an unsuccessful day of searching. "In the meantime, there's no rhyme or reason with morels."

Someday is now for Neogen and its three corporate partners. Brinton Miller, Neogen's vice president for scientific affairs, said the company is ready to move its morels from the laboratory into pilot production farms operated by Kuhn-Champignon.

Neogen has held its morel patent since 1986, but marketing was delayed while scientists developed strains that will produce a pound of morels per square foot within 60 to 70 days, Miller said.

Solving the morel mystery was a matter of "duplicating the mushroom's spring growing conditions."

"The problem was, nobody ever thought like a morel before," Miller said.

If negotiations with Domino's go through, American consumers could see their first commercial morels in restaurants and groceries by next spring, Lonik said. Morels wouldn't be found in pizza delivery cars — Domino's has no intention of serving morel pizzas.

Lonik said he believes the market is more than ready for commercial morels.

He said Domino's floated the idea past a group of investment bankers on Tuesday with favorable results.

Currently, demand far exceeds supply — when there is a supply.

"They've become so dear, we only sell them mail order to individual customers," said Justin Rashid, who runs a specialty foods business in Petoskey.

In a good year, Rashid's American Spoon Foods sends out 5,000 pounds of wild morels it has bought from about 100 freelance pickers.

Altogether, U.S. suppliers sell from 200,000 to 500,000 pounds of morels a year, about 2 percent of the world market, Lonik said. India, Pakistan and Turkey together pick 40 percent of the world's wild morels, drying them for shipment to France and Germany, the biggest consumers of the fungi.

Blackfoot principal turns off television

BLACKFOOT (AP) — The Great TV Turn-off is on at Stalker Elementary School in Blackfoot and one of the families participating is that of Principal Dewane Wren.

Wren's wife, Melanie, said four of her children are students at Stalker and they all signed pledges Monday to give up television for a week. The boys are doing fairly well, she said, but her husband and two daughters seem to be missing the tube.

"Dewane really misses watching the news, and he sometimes watches TV to relax at night," Mrs. Wren said. "He almost turned it on last night, but instead he came out to the kitchen and washed the dishes."

The Wrens' four sons were among 249 children at the school who signed pledges Monday agreeing to give up television for a week.

But Mrs. Wren said it will take the entire week to tell what effect the turn-off has.

"They're pretty athletic," she said of her sons. "Most of the time they prefer being outside playing games to being in the house watching TV, except on weekends and for a while after school, or unless there's a good movie on.

"But they've been doing really well so far. My two daughters thought it was a good idea until it came down to not turning the TV on, then they didn't like it so well."

But the TV in the Wren house is on sometimes for her 2-year-old son, Shawn, she said.

"It's too hard to try and explain to a 2-year-old why he can't watch Sesame Street," she said.

If it's a success, the Great TV Turn-off may become an annual event for Stalker students and their families.

It was initiated by first-grade teacher Larue Hong, who brought the idea back from the Idaho Reading Association Conference in Boise last October.

Participation means a week without television, and is intended to let families discover what changes will occur both inside and outside the classrooms, Ms. Hong said. The plan is to get children to play games, read, and talk with their families instead of sitting in front of the television, she said.

"The pledge they signed says they will go "cold turkey" in the turn-off, Ms. Hong said.

They will wear buttons reading "No TV," and keep a diary of the changes that result in their lives from turning off television. No TV includes video movies and games related to television.

'Miss America bandit' receives light 2-year term

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A bank robber dubbed the "Miss America" bandit because of her glamorous disguises received a light two years in prison from a judge who said she had come under the influence of a Svengali-like boyfriend.

"The history of it is that men have exercised traditional control over the activities of women, and I'm not going to ignore that, no matter how much flak I get from women's lib," U.S. District Judge A. Andrew Hauk said Tuesday.

Hauk also said: "I have a hard time believing there weren't drugs involved, arising as it did over there in Oakland, in the black surroundings. We can't kid ourselves."

Dannielle Tyece Mast, 21, of Reedsport, Ore., a former cheerleader and teller who used fashionable wigs and sunglasses as disguises, was convicted of taking $13,000 in five holdups last summer. Federal sentencing guidelines called for four to five years in prison.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Gregory W. Alarcon asked for a stiff sentence but Hauk, one of the most experienced judges on the federal bench, agreed with Miss Mast's lawyer that she acted under the spell of her live-in boyfriend in Oakland.

"I think it's a fact of life that men can exercise a Svengali influence over women," Hauk declared. He added, "Women are a soft touch, particularly if sex is involved."

Bush carried gypsy moth to N. Dakota

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) — Tests have confirmed that a tree transplanted from the White House lawn to the North Dakota Capitol grounds by President Bush carried the destructive, leaf-eating gypsy moth.

"It's the first time we've ever had gypsy moths in North Dakota," said Keith Winks of the federal Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service.

The gypsy moth is a troublesome insect in the eastern United States and some western states. Its larvae defoliate trees, which will die if infested ton many years in a row, Winks said Tuesday.

Several tiny moth larvae were found on the president's tree when it was delivered to Bismarck on April

Fire department faces wild barbecue

TWIN FALLS – When the fat's in the fire, it can mean flames six feet high.

"We've got a pig on fire," Capt. Ron Clark said Wednesday when the call came into the Twin Falls Fire Department.

The fire crew rushed to the home of Mark Carlson to find flames shooting into the air from a huge pig Carlson had been roasting on a barbecue pit. The motor spinning the porker on its spit had stopped revolving, dripping grease ignited and the pig burst into flames.

After it was hosed down, the carcass was quartered and Carlson finished cooking in ovens.

"It kind of charred it a little bit, but it's still good meat," said Battalion Chief Jerry Hafer.

"It already had that smoked flavor," he joked.

He said he will temporarily work part time until he is completely recovered.

Madsen said he was overwhelmed with cards and flowers from well-wishers.

Outdoor fire open burning season officially closes

TWIN FALLS – Open burning season for outdoor fires ended Wednesday. All fires outside city limits must have valid burning permits, according to Idaho law.

Burning permits are free and may be obtained from the Idaho Department of Lands, U.S. Forest Service, Bureau of Land Management and timber protective associations.

Permits will not be issued during times of high winds or other times of high fire hazard. Man-caused fires on state lands during 1988 were double the number during 1987.

Permits and information on burning are available in the Twin Falls area from Shoshone and Burley District offices of the BLM, Sawtooth National Forest offices or rural fire departments.

Furniture stores select downtown Twin Falls

By MICHELLE COLE
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – From bust to boom – a shuffle by local furniture stores is helping to transform downtown Twin Falls.

This week two area merchants announced their plans to expand into some of the retail space left vacant after Magic Valley Mall came to town:

• On Wednesday, Bob and Bonnie Gillespie, owners of Banner Furniture Inc., announced their purchase of the Bon Marche building on Main Avenue from the Hood family of New York.

• The night before, Skip Engberg took the first step in relocating his furniture manufacturing business and showroom from the outskirts of Twin Falls to larger quarters downtown.

"We had some restless nights, but we're excited about the move," said Bob Gillespie.

Following months of negotiations, Gillespie said he expects the sale to be final within a few days.

Banner Furniture currently leases 14,000-square-feet on Second Avenue West. The store will expand into the 42,500-square-foot department store space in about two months, after some painting and minor remodeling, Gillespie said.

While it may take a little time, Gillespie said he intends to beef up his inventory to fill the tripled floor space by expanding in every department.

Gillespie said he also expects to hire as many as eight new employees after the move.

Engberg, owner of Engberg's Handcrafted Furniture, asked the city's Planning and Zoning Commission Tuesday night for a special permit allowing his furniture manufacturing and sales business to move into the Fashion Broker building, also located on Main Avenue across from the recently vacated Pedersen's store.

The commission approved Engberg's request. But the measure must still come before the City Council. Engberg said he needs a larger showroom and thinks his business will benefit from being a part of a downtown cluster.

In March another established furniture retailer, Claude Brown's Music & Furniture, announced it would expand into the old J.C. Penney building. That expansion, along with the expansions announced this week means by summer downtown will offer more than 100,000 square feet brimming with recliners, dinettes and appliances.

Local furniture retailers say that's good for business. Like car dealers and fast-food restaurants, they say their customer traffic is enhanced by their proximity to other furniture stores.

"We think it's great," said Les Hazen, general manager of Cain's Furniture and Appliance Store, a longtime Main Avenue retailer.

Gillespie and Engberg said they considered other locations, but downtown won out.

"I looked at both malls, but I'm kind of against giving outsiders money," Engberg said. "I'm really pro-Idaho. I don't buy anything of any significance from out-of-state suppliers."

Emery Peterson, chairman of the downtown Business and Improvement District, said he thinks it's natural for furniture retailers to take advantage of the large vacant buildings and relatively low rents available downtown.

"We're very enthusiastic about it," he said. "It's a very good sign."

Hailey plans meetings on street repair

By ROBERT DOYLE
Times-News correspondent

HAILEY – Residents here can talk with city officials in late May about how to pay for reconstructing the town's streets.

The City Council set May 25 as the first of a series of meetings to gather public comment on the council's intent to undertake a major street repair project. General obligation bonds or a local improvement district are two funding options the council is considering.

The meeting will be at 7 p.m. in the Wood River High School auditorium.

In other action, the council unanimously approved Mayor Paschal Drake's nomination of George Miley to fill the council vacancy created by the recent resignation of Dorothy Moore.

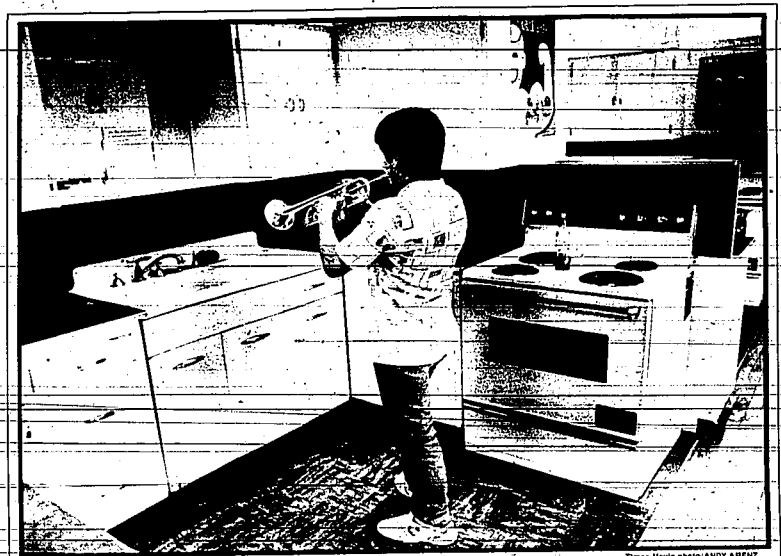

Miley, Planning and Zoning Commission member, is a nine-year resident of Hailey and owner of Miley Associates Insurance. He just completed a three-year stint on the Planning Commission. He will serve until the general election in November 1989.

Moore, elected in 1983 and re-elected again in 1987, cited poor health as the reason for her resignation. In addition, she and her husband sold their Hailey home, and a subsequent move to Ketchum made her ineligible to continue as a Hailey Council member.

Hailey is considering a $1.75 million project to reconstruct 26 miles of streets in the town. Hailey's streets were built to code years ago but specifications then were looser than they are now. The streets are such a patchwork of repairs that they need to be completely replaced.

The council revised the road project from the $1 million version last year that drew

Additional Magic Valley school board races – B3

RUPERT – Two School Board seats here have plenty of competition while the third seat is uncontested in the May 16.

In Zone 1, Nick Stephens, Teresa McKinster and David Elison are vying for the seat vacated by Larry Jensen who recently moved to another zone.

Stephens says he is running for the seat because parents, teachers and the administration don't communicate well with each other.

"I've been a substitute teacher for the last 10 years and I've gotten a wide focus and talked with teachers and parents and have dealt with the administration. I think we should all come together for the good of our children."

Stephens, a farmer in the Emerson district, said teachers should have more say in such areas as scheduling the school calendar year, text books, school dress codes and discipline.

Stephens says he would like to get "everybody talking" for the good of the students. "I will listen," he says.

McKinster agrees that there should be more cooperation between educators, administration and the community and says she could accomplish that. "I feel that education is the basis of economic development in our area and I feel that coming from a business background I could help to prepare the education system for community development." She is an interior designer with L'Herrisons.

"I'm not dissatisfied," McKinster said. "I just feel that we need some different

Trans IV asks for matching funds for bus

By KIRK MITCHELL
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – An official from the Trans IV public transportation service says without county assistance the company will have to reduce its service.

Charley Chambers of Trans IV said the money is needed to help offset the cost of a 13-seat bus with room for two wheelchairs and a hydraulic chair lift that costs $32,782.

"At this point I don't know where it would come from, but we could look," said County Commissioner Marvin Hempleman.

Chambers asked commissioners Wednesday to pay part of the $6,557, the group's matching fund obligation. The federal Urban Mass Transit Administration has already paid the rest through the Idaho Transportation Department.

Without the county support Trans IV would have to use operating funds to pay the matching obligation, which would force it to cut back on the hours some drivers could work.

Trans IV picks up senior citizens to take them to and from grocery stores and doctors' offices, provides daily commuter service and takes children and adults to and from day-care facilities and work locally.

Elderly people pay only $1.25 round trip for the service, Chambers said.

The rest of the cost of transporting the elderly comes from a $100,000 federal grant, he said.

"I can't charge that 83-year-old woman what it would cost to get to the door," he said.

The county contribution would enhance Trans IV's chances to qualify for grants in the future, Chambers said.

"We need to do what we can to keep it in operation," said Commissioner Jim Fraley.

Twin Falls elementary schools may get individual counselors

By JENNIFER KAUTH
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – In five years, each of Twin Falls' six elementary schools could have its own counselor – helping all kids in all classes, not just those who visit their offices.

"This takes counseling from being ancillary to putting it right into the curriculum," explained Mary Howie, a counselor at Robert Stuart Junior High.

Howie and other members of a counseling advisory committee presented to the School Board Tuesday a five-year plan to bring counseling up to par with a state recommended model.

The plan stems from a 1982 Education Department resolution that schools provide counseling to all grade levels and that it become more comprehensive.

"Right now we're doing several things in the junior highs and high school, but nothing at the elementary level," said Levita Younger, a high school counselor.

The program's focus is to help the student become a fully functional person, Younger said. She said the new program would help kids improve their self-understanding and decision-making skills as well as help them plan their lives.

The curriculum would start with preschoolers, Assistant Superintendent Keith Tolzin explained, and then build as children move through the grade levels.

Under the new curriculum plan, which the School Board has not yet approved, counselors would spend 30 percent to 40 percent of their time teaching in classrooms, Tolzin said.

"It's a different approach to counseling," Howie said. "The counselor doesn't sit in the office and wait for kids." Counselors would also spend evenings teaching child-rearing skills to parents.

The School Board applauded the new approach to counseling but was split over how to implement the program.

The committee's recommendation involves putting counselors in three elementary schools next year. Though the board already has approved the hiring, some board members argued about the fairness of giving only three schools counselors.

Member Steve Tolman suggested each counselor serve two schools. Tolzin argued that this could decrease the counselor-effectiveness because the student-counselor ratio would soar to as much as 1,300 to 1.

Chairman Calvin Lamborn suggested asking voters for an override levy for three more counselors, but other members objected. The board will discuss the program further, perhaps at a special meeting later this month.

EPA funds help schools remove asbestos threat

TWIN FALLS – The school district plans four asbestos removal projects this summer, thanks in part to an Environmental Protection Agency grant and loan.

The School Board Tuesday night accepted an $18,799 grant and a $122,558 interest-free loan from the EPA.

Doyt Simcoe, the district's maintenance manager, said the school district applied for the federal funds around Christmas, receiving the top three slots on the EPA's Idaho priority list for this year.

Simcoe stressed that there are no health hazards at this time, but that the asbestos must be removed at some point.

"We feel the project needs to be addressed as quickly as possible," Simcoe said.

The loan, which is interest-free, can be paid back over an 18-year period starting in 1991.

"There's no place in the world you can get that money interest-free like this," Superintendent Carl Snow told the School Board.

The grant and loan specifically name the three asbestos removal projects they must go for: insulation around steam pipes in the high school's gym; the high school's shop area; and under the stage in Morningside Elementary's cafeteria.

Castleford takes time out for spring cleanup

By DIANE SCHORZMAN
Times-News correspondent

CASTLEFORD – It's spring clean-up time again at Castleford.

The city mailed its annual spring clean-up letters to all city residents last week.

The council decided earlier this year that it will enforce all ordinances concerning cleaning the city to commemorate the state's Centennial.

City ordinance requires all city lots to be cleaned of weeds, grass and rubbish by June 1 of each year. The city can clean the lots of those residents who do not comply and charge the cost to the owners.

At the Castleford City Council meeting Tuesday, City Clerk Patsy Kinyon reviewed with the council members another city ordinance that applies to such items as derelict cars and dilapidated buildings on city lots.

The city can fine property owners $100 if they don't comply with official clean-up notice within 30 days after notification, according to the ordinance. Daily fines after that can be assessed.

The council voted to accept a bid of $1992 from the Olympus Insurance Agency for liability insurance for the city.

The new insurance policy includes liability insurance for the city's policemen, as well as an error and omissions clause that protects the city's elected officials from being sued for any decisions made in council meetings.

In other business, Fire Chief Dan DeBoer reported that the Castleford Volunteer Fire Department is planning some summer fund-raising activities

Symms asks for action on Panama strife

WASHINGTON (AP) — A personal aide sent by Sen. Steve Symms to Panama saw voting fraud and a man killed by Noriega forces, the Idaho Republican says.

"The representative, who was not identified, was within 20 yards of a newsman who was shot and killed," Symms said Wednesday. "He was shot at himself by terrorists that the Noriega forces armed."

Symms said the United States made a bad treaty with Panama over the canal a decade ago, but added that the conditions of the pact could provide Americans a chance for another examination.

International observers of the Panamanian election this week have called the process fraudulent because of intervention by Noriega, the de facto leader of the country.

"There was a premise to the treaty which suggests that the canal will not be turned over to Panama except to a democratic government," Symms said. "It's very clear that (Gen. Manuel) Noriega does not have a democratic government."

One option open to President Bush to free the Panamanian people includes military intervention.

Kimberly street resurfacing now emerges as City Council concern

By DENISE TURNER
Times-News correspondent

KIMBERLY – Resurfacing city streets replaced sidewalk construction as the hot topic at the City Council meeting Tuesday.

Following some discussion, the council instructed Public Works Supervisor Ken Story to advertise for bids to seal streets that have been resurfaced during the last three years. The council also asked him to advertise for bids to put in 600 feet of 6-inch water line on Jefferson Street.

At last month's council meeting, a motion to begin work on a long discussed sidewalk project died for lack of a second following a survey of area citizens showing respondents opposed paying for it.

This month, council began discussing whether to spend the $40,000 left in this year's street budget to resurface streets or to seal streets which have recently been resurfaced.

Jefferson Street was targeted as a possibility for reconstruction.

and Story said the street needs a new water line.

"I think we need to make a complete study of all water lines in the town and start funding work on them," Councilman George Nauman said. "It would give us better fire protection to have more water for fires." He added, "There wouldn't be enough water to put a small building fire out in many areas."

Nauman suggested putting in a water line along Jefferson Street before starting any street repairs there. He asked Story if a new water line on Jefferson might change water pressure enough to erupt some of the old adjoining water lines.

"It could," Story said.

Story estimated that about $16,600 would be needed to seal all streets resurfaced in 1988.

In other business:

• The council accepted a proposal from Mike Mathews of the Twin Falls-based OMI engineering and maintenance firm to survey area industrial users and determining possible hazards to Kimberly's waste treatment plant. The program is mandatory and will cost Kimberly $1,000 for the first year.

• Council agreed to allow Story to shop around for a city dump truck and pickup truck with the intention of including money for the purchase in next year's budget.

• Council will meet at 8 p.m. May 23 to set the 1989-90 fiscal year salary figure, which will allow the clerk to begin the budget preparation. Council hopes to adopt a tentative budget during an Aug. 29 special meeting.

• Council agreed to lower area residents' sewer bills by $1 due to the fact that a 20-year sewer bond was paid off this month.

The district also plans to remove the asbestos-laden, sprayed-on acoustical material in the high school's band room this summer, but the district will bear the cost itself.

Also Tuesday, the board also approved remodeling eight restrooms at Lincoln and Bickel elementary schools. The project should be completed this summer.

The project was previously listed as a secondary priority for next year, but administrators re-evaluated the project and moved it up after Jeanne Heppock, Lincoln's Parent Teacher Association president, complained in a series of letters about "appalling" restrooms.

In one restroom, locking stall doors, toilets are visible from the hallway when the door is open, Hoppock said. Also, urinals are cracked and tile seems to be caulked with tar in several places, her letter said.

"Kids have had stomach aches and bladder infections because they don't want to use the restrooms," she said in an interview.

• Heard a report from Support Services Director Bill Feusahrens about serving handicapped 3-to 5-year-olds in the schools next year. He said the Child Development Center will continue serving about 25 of the more severely handicapped youngsters. Thus the district will need only two teachers and two classrooms for the program instead of the three of each previously thought to be needed.

substantial – local opposition. Members said earlier this year they are committed to a repair project of some type.

City Planner Emily Laven told council members she prefers funding the project through general obligation bonds. The council agreed, with Councilman Rick Davis' suggestion that the city have public meetings to gather comment before any decision is made concerning how to fund the project.

Laven will prepare a presentation on the advantages and disadvantages of the two funding plans.

General obligation bonds are paid for through taxes based on assessed property value. They require two-thirds majority of a public vote to pass.

A local improvement district assesses payment based on the square footage of road bordering property and the extent of work needed on that section. The council can establish a city-wide local improvement district.

Drake, who was mayor last year when local opposition killed the $4 million project, expressed frustration at attempts to fix the city's streets.

"I'm tired of hearing about it," he said. "We'll put it out to the public and they can vote it down if they wish. There's just no Good Fairy out there who's going to do it."

In other action, the council:

• Delayed any decision on whether to increase the city's impact zone – an area outside city limits where changes could affect the city.

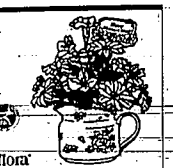

• Donated $650 from the city recreation fund to the Northern Rockies Folk Festival, this August in Hailey City Park.

• Committed itself to negotiating, with an anonymous donor who wishes to buy Forest Service property on Main Street and lease it to the city with an option to buy for city offices. Should such negotiations be successful, the city would relocate its offices to the property and sell property it presently occupies. Cost of the 46,000 square-foot parcel on Main Street is $242,000. The current city building site is worth about $190,000, Drake said.

• Approved a 30-day extension to Property Management West, which had been directed to stop doing business at its location by this Wednesday because the area is zoned for residential use.

• Tabled a resolution to support the Bellevue City Council's attempt to bring an injunction against the Department of Fish and Game for changing fishing regulations on the Wood River. "Before we make a decision on something like this, we ought to have the facts," Drake said.

Federal officials tell Stubbs SIS project really is 'pork barrel project' for Idaho

By N. S. NOKKENTVED
Times-News writer

TWIN FALLS – Some government officials are aware that the Special Isotope Separator is a "pork barrel project" that is not supported by all Idaho citizens.

Federal officials and legislators know that Idaho doesn't accept the laser-driven plutonium refinery proposed for construction at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory, Twin Falls County Republican Chairman Mark Stubbs was told during a recent visit to Washington, D.C.

"We know that it's a pet project of (Sen. Steve) Symms and (Sen. James) McClure and that (Rep. Richard) Stallings is going along with them. We know that it's what we call a pork barrel project," Stubbs said members of a House panel on Energy Department facilities told him.

Stubbs and fellow member of Voters Organized To Educate on INEL, Dr. Peter Rickards, were in the capital earlier this week to tell Rep. John Spratt, D-S.C., chairman of the House panel, and other federal officials, that there's more opposition to projects in Idaho than they have been led to believe.

Rickards said that officials wouldn't deny that the SIS project would be the first step in moving to Idaho a part of the Energy Department's weapons production facilities at Rocky Flats, Colo.

Stallings termed a "perverse logic" Rickards' suggestion that SIS be built someplace that's already polluted, according to Rickards.

Stubbs also wanted to tell officials about "the concerns of Idaho citizens that, contrary to what our delegation in Washington may say – Republicans and Democrats – there's a large block of people out there who are concerned about cleanup and the priority of cleanup, he said.

He was surprised to find many congressmen, including Stallings, concerned with cleanup and waste issues. He said Energy Secretary James Watkins has been putting pressure on department staff to do something about the waste issue.

Stubbs said Watkins had told department leaders "You've got the brightest minds in the country. You've got the best labs in the world. Why haven't you done something before now in cleanup technology?"

Pressure from Watkins and negative news reports about federal energy sites have raised the level of concern within the Energy Department, Stubbs said.

The ultimate fate of radioactive waste buried INEL still is undecided as funding is focused on other problems.

"They're finally admitting publicly the bottom line is they really don't know how to deal with it," Stubbs said.

Stubbs also said government officials have a lot of faith in the credibility of a report due out soon on the need for the plutonium that would be supplied by SIS.

Spratt's panel has commissioned Col. Thomas Johnson, a West Point nuclear physicist, to study the need based on strategic policies and current supplies.

Peavey, other lawmakers dispel notion of widespread support in Idaho for SIS

By AMY GAMERMAN
States News Service

WASHINGTON — State lawmakers are in Washington this week in an effort to convince Congress that most Idahoans — contrary to what the Idaho delegation says — are not happy about having the SIS plutonium program in their state.

Idaho state Sens. John Peavey, D-Carey, and Brian Donesley, D-Ada, joined Ketchum City Council member Suzanne Orb in a lobbying effort targeted at members of House and Senate panels on Energy Department facilities.

"We want to try to dispel the notion in Washington that there is widespread support for SIS," said Peavey. "This is a bad thing for Idaho. (U.S.) Senator Symms is wrong, Senator McClure is wrong, Congressman Stallings is wrong."

Donesley agreed. "Until some need for the program is shown, I think it's more pork barrel," he said.

Republican Sen. Jim McClure and Democratic Rep. Richard Stallings have been staunch advocates of the program, which they say is essential for the national security and would bring valuable laser technology to southern Idaho.

SEN. JOHN PEAVEY
Discusses SIS in Washington

The word on the Hill these days is that funding for the program, which would use sophisticated laser technology to create weapons-grade plutonium for nuclear bombs, will likely be delayed a year. Critics of the program argue that current plutonium supplies are adequate, and that funding should be diverted to clean-up programs.

The Idaho state lawmakers said they were encouraged by their meetings with congressional staff, which reinforced that message. "It was practically universal," said Peavey, who visited about 10 representatives' offices. "They said the budget crunch was such that they weren't about to start a project of questionable need."

Growing public concern about the SIS project has spread to Democrats and Republicans on the state legislature, they said. The mood during the last session was pretty much we wanted to see some real progress toward cleaning up before we start new projects," Peavey said.

That bipartisan tone echoed this week when Mark Stubbs, chairman of Twin Falls County Republican Party, arrived in Washington to do a little anti-SIS lobbying of his own. Stubbs is a member of VOTE on INEL, a Twin Falls group that opposes the defense program, and spent several days visiting representatives.

3 school board seats at issue in Filer

By DONNA SCHORZMAN
Times-News correspondent

FILER – Three School Board seats here are up for election May 16 but only one is contested.

Incumbent Dave Annis, Linda Wright and Olie Turner have filed for the Zone 1 seat.

Annis, a farmer finishing his first three-year term, says his experience will help him in a second term.

"When I came on we had a large debt that we have been able to turn around and we have gotten the district in a financially responsible position with our spending," Annis says.

Annis would like to see an alcohol and chemical dependency program established in the schools and he would like to use his lobbying experience to help the district.

Wright said she's running because, "I'm just very, very interested in education."

Wright, who organizes jury candidates for court in Twin Falls County, said students graduating from Filer are often not ready for higher education and she wants to change that. "I want our students to be able to compete with the other area school children. I don't see why a small school can't do that."

Wright wants to push the subjects that will allow the students from Filer to do better on college entrance exams.

Wright is enrolled in a business program with Lewis and Clark College and she believes that her experience would benefit the district.

Turner, Filer postmaster, said the district needs to expand some programs but he also wants to cut costs.

Elementary and junior high schools libraries need to be expanded, he said.

Also, he would like the district to stop combining two different age groups in the same classroom. "We have a combination class this year with fourth and fifth together, and we don't need that," he said.

Turner would like to see the athletic department program expanded and the gymnasium updated. He would also like to see a drug program installed at the grade-school level.

Turner also wants to cut costs. "I'm against higher taxes. I'd like to see if we can cut costs other than our teacher's salaries. I think there are other places to cut."

Incumbent Bob Foster is running unopposed in Zone 3 and Douglas Lincoln is unopposed in Zone 4.

Glenns Ferry to see 1 contested school race

By DONNA SCHORZMAN
Times-News correspondent

GLENNS FERRY – One of the two seats up for School Board elections this year is contested.

Wes Wootan and incumbent Nancy Blanksma have filed for Zone 2, vacated when Richard Stimpson resigned six weeks ago. Blanksma was appointed to finish his term and she would like to continue in the job.

She said she's concerned with the academics. "I would like to see an emphasis put on academics and to expand our curriculum," she says.

The curriculum at the high school is limited, she said, adding that the school should offer more electives.

Blanksma keeps the books for the family farm and is a certified teacher.

Wootan, a potato farmer, said he's like to serve on the board to represent the people of his area. "I have children in school and I want to make sure mine as well as the rest of them get what they should have," Wootan said.

Glenns Ferry schools are in good shape, he said. "It's got good academic things going for it and I'd like to see those things continue."

Kenneth Thompson is running unopposed for the board in District 3.

perspectives."

Elison, a fieldman for Amalgamated Sugar, says that Minidoka County needs more community involvement in education. "I think we've got some good things going and we've got some things that could be helped along. I would like to see a little more judicious use of the money spent."

Elison is also concerned about the drop-out rate.

"The main thing is to get people interested," Elison says. "There is a lot of apathy in regards to education here."

In Zone 2, Larry Jensen, who resigned his trustee seat in Zone 1 when he moved to Paul, and Wayne Maughan are running against incumbent Warren Snyder.

Snyder, owner of Snyder's Automotive Repair in Paul, says he is running for re-election because, "I feel an obligation to continue."

Snyder says his main interest "is to try to see if there's some way to reward the best teachers. I think the better and best need to be rewarded more than the poor and average." It is difficult to change much due to the state and tepcher's union, he said, "but I'd like to try."

Jensen said he enjoyed working on the board with people who are "conscientious and concerned. . ."

He also wants to help implement the trimester system at Minidoka High School. "I've been a big fan of the trimester," Jensen says. The plan was adopted right after his resignation from the board.

Jensen is a farmer and has six children in the district.

Maughan, also a farmer, is running for the Zone 2 seat partly because he is unhappy with Snyder. Maughan says Snyder talks about finding a way to reward good teachers and do away with tenure for poor teachers, but Maughan says Snyder would not testify to that when the question came up in the Legislature and he had the opportunity.

Maughan believes more community involvement is one way to help the education system. Volunteers should be used to help in the school to give students more "one-on-one" instruction, he said.

He would like to help with implementing the drivers' education program with the new driving age into the school system. Maughan says there should also be more use of the School Board committees such as the calendar committee.

"I'm not a one-issue man," Maughan says. He says there are many things he is interested in working on as a member of the board.

Incumbent Russell Holland is running unopposed in Zone 3.

27-year-old virgin wonders how to overcome shyness

Abigail VanBuren
Dear Abby

DEAR ABBY: Are the women in this country nuts, or am I? We are constantly being told that all the good men are either married or gay — as though single men are at the bottom of the barrel, or else why would they be single?

I can't answer for all single men — only for myself. I'm 27 years old, considered fairly good-looking, average height and weight, in good physical condition, my hair is thinning a little — I wear glasses, and yes, I am shy with a capital "S." Surprise — I am still a virgin! So what? I graduated from college at 22 and have worked as a bartender for the last few years. I've saved my money and have been accepted by a good law school this fall.

During the last few years, I've been involved with four women. I guess I screwed up with the first three by revealing my virgin status. Two thought I was lying and dumped me. The third classified me as a "geek." I kept silent with the fourth. Unfortunately, once we reached a more intimate stage, my nervousness ruined everything. I suppose this would have been OK at 16, but at my age, she thought something was "wrong" with me. Hey, ladies, I'm an intelligent, sincere, sensitive man — a gentleman. How about a survey, Abby? Is an inexperienced, decent single guy disqualified in the search for a mate?

— STRIKING OUT IN FLORIDA

DEAR STRIKING OUT: I don't need a survey to tell me that decent women want decent men. I also know that virtue and virginity don't necessarily go hand in hand. There are virginal cads and experienced people with hearts of gold.

Since by your own admission you are shy with a capital "S," get some counseling to overcome your shyness, and the rest will fall into place. There are singles groups, square dancing, cooking classes, workout gyms. Get going. The longest march in the world starts with one step.

DEAR ABBY: I would like to express my sympathy for "Old-Time Salesgirl," who deplores the lack of consideration shown by prospective customers who mistreat garments they try on, then reject.

A similar attitude toward all things, even including their own possessions, has become the hallmark of a much too large proportion of young adults, and sadly, many of their parents.

This "hooray for me and to heck with everyone else" attitude disgusts and infuriates this Victorian respecter of others' rights and property, but my only recourse is to attempt to compensate for those boors. Yes, I'm the chump who picks up the box of cereal or the toy from the store aisle and tries to find its rightful place on the shelf, who reorganizes the scrambled greeting cards in the rack, and who straightens the twisted garments on their hangers while shopping.

I do these things by natural compulsion, for the sheer satisfaction of knowing that I may have lightened another's daily burdens. So, cheer up, "Old-Time Salesgirl," there are still a few considerate old squares on your side. My bride of 43 years is another of this same archaic breed.

— FRED LEE MONTGOMERY, GLENDALE, ARIZ.

DEAR MR. MONTGOMERY: How refreshing to learn that amidst the cactus in Arizona, an orchid blooms — make that two, and greet your good wife for me.

DEAR ABBY: Thank's for encouraging the members of a high school reunion planning committee to send flowers to the parents of the classmates who had passed away.

We lost a dear daughter 37 years ago, and would have cherished even a brief note — signed by her classmates — acknowledging that she was remembered and missed.

— DALE AND LEONA PERRY

DEAR DALE AND LEONA: Please accept my belated and heartfelt sympathy at the loss of your beloved daughter. I think that sending a letter to the parents of a deceased classmate, signed by all the surviving classmates, is a splendid idea. I hope it catches on.

Allergy season extended by relatively mild winter

By The Baltimore Sun

You're sniffling and sneezing. Your nose is running, your eyes are itching and the tickle in your throat is about to drive you mad.

Welcome to allergy season.

The trees have been pollinating, one kind after another, since early March. The grasses will be blowing airborne particles at you until mid-July. After that, you can expect the weed pollens to attack.

An unusually large number of teeny tiny motes of allergenic stuff is hankering for a harbor inside your airway this season, say the allergists. The mild winter has brought us a long, fertile spring.

And, according to Dr. Martin Valentine, professor of medicine at the Johns Hopkins School of Medicine and clinical director of the allergy and asthma center at Good Samaritan Hospital, in Baltimore, Mother Nature probably will force a bumper crop of pollen-producing plant life in August to compensate for the paltry growth during last year's hot, dry summer.

Misery has a lot of company. An estimated 14.6 million people in this country have the eyes-and-nose-and-head symptoms we call hay fever and rose fever — though the problem has nothing to do with either hay or roses, and physical fevers are signs of infections, not allergies. And the August goldenrod, much feared by local sneezers, isn't involved in allergy, either; blame plain old ragweed instead.

Pretty, colorful plants get the birds and bees to do the mating for them, says Valentine, and therefore can afford to create big, heavy pollens that drop, harmlessly, to the ground.

What you have to sneeze at are the duller growths with the lighter pollens that float about and set off a seasonal attack of what is more properly called allergic rhinitis.

It's a genetic condition, usually manifests by the teen years and sometimes diminishes with age. "However," says Valentine, "there are many exceptions. One man we've treated here developed hay fever at age 70."

The immune system sets it off. Allergic people create a huge number of antibodies against allergens. These antibodies, known as IgE (for "immunoglobulin E"), migrate to histamine-secreting "mast" cells in the mucous membranes of the airway, the skin, the eyes and the gastrointestinal tract and to certain kinds of white blood cells (called "basophils").

The antibodies wait there to ambush the foreigners.

"If the body made IgE antibodies last year, when you inhale the pollen this year it meets tissue coated with IgE, which releases histamine," Valentine explains. Histamine relaxes the muscles around the blood vessels so disease-fighting fluids can leak out of the capillaries and into the surrounding tissue. Histamine also can send the muscles in the lower airway into spasm.

What you get is a stuffy head, swollen breathing passages, runny nose, watery eyes and tight chest — and, if you're asthmatic as well as allergic, constriction of the bronchial tree.

"People can get a bad asthma attack from allergic rhinitis, and die from asthma," warns Valentine.

"And," says Dr. John Bacon, an allergist who is also an assistant clinical professor of pediatrics at the University of Maryland School of Medicine, "if you're allergic to one thing, there's a higher chance that you'll also have asthma."

Experts recommend safety guidelines for skateboarders

CHICAGO — The American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) says that children under 5 years of age should not use skateboards — they aren't able to protect themselves from injury — and skateboarding should be prohibited on streets and highways.

Writing in the May issue of Pediatrics, the AAP's Committee on Accident and Poison Prevention says that children who ride skateboards should wear helmets and protective padding to prevent injury. The AAP adds that some types of riding, such as on homemade ramps on hard surfaces, and catching a ride with cars, are particularly hazardous and dangerous.

Between 1964 and 1987, at least 36 children are known to have died as a result of skateboard injuries in the United States. In an analysis of Consumer Product Safety Commission (CPSC) data from 1981 to 1985, 88 percent of injuries involved skateboarders less than 20 years old; 45 percent involved 10-14 year-olds. The data also noted that severity of injuries increased as younger age groups were examined.

According to the AAP, injuries at different ages can be explained by patterns of use. Very young children often use skateboards at home. These children have a high center of gravity and poor ability to break a fall. Injuries are most frequently to the head, though these injuries are usually not severe.

Older children more often use their skateboards on streets and highways. They usually can break their falls, but often injure extremities in doing so. When they cannot break a fall — at high speeds and in traffic — serious head injury may result.

Mark Widome, M.D., chairman of the AAP's Committee on Accident and Poison Prevention, says, "Skateboards are but one example of the increased safety risk when children are on wheels. Whether your child is a teenager on a skateboard, a school-age child on roller skates, a preschooler on a tricycle or even an infant in a baby walker, you should be aware of the risk of injury and take the necessary steps to minimize that risk."

Sen. Noh comments on depredation funds

CHUBBUCK (AP) — Sportsmen should understand the possible implications before they suggest every taxpayer pay a portion of wildlife depredation costs, says state Sen. Laird Noh, R-Kimberly.

"That may not be something you want. I think you want to think about that very deeply and know the potential ramifications before you make a decision," Noh told the Southeast Idaho Rod and Gun Club Tuesday.

Noh, chairman of the Senate Resources and Environment Committee, said legally wildlife in Idaho belongs to the state. But if general fund money is used to pay for farm losses suffered by marauding big game animals, other special interest groups could demand seats on the state Fish and Game Commission, potentially doing harm to wildlife interests.

The five-member commission is composed of sportsmen and wildlife advocates appointed by the governor.

However, most of the 75 in attendance here agreed sportsmen should not be saddled with the entire burden of compensating farm losses. They said all Idahoans derive benefits from wildlife and it is unfair to penalize only those who purchase fishing and hunting licenses.

The Legislature this year appropriated $500,000 in Fish and Game Department funds to pay depredation claims. To date, nearly $1.2 million in claims have been filed. The state Board of Examiners will decide which claims will be paid. It's expected to take about two more week for preliminary investigation into the claims.

"Let's let everybody pay for it. Let's not just rob the Fish and Game Department — the golden goose," said Pocatellan George Shail.

Some sportsmen suggested ranchers pay a portion of depredation costs because the general public has been subsidizing them for years with below-market-value grazing fees on public lands.

"I would be happy for sportsmen's monies to go toward depredation. But at the same time I think stockmen's funds should be used to foot some of the bill," said Pocatellan Eric Krasa.

Sen. Jim Christiansen, D-Aberdeen, said depredation is a real problem for farmers and ranchers and must be addressed. He estimated he suffered $14,000 in losses last winter when antelope knocked down his fence, ate his alfalfa and allowed his cattle to get out. Six of his cows later died from bloating because they got into a neighboring farmer's potatoes.

Chubbuck resident John Kontes said farmers are always looking for a handout and Christiansen would not have suffered the losses if he had built a better fence.

"Good common sense tells you if you hang money out, somebody's going to come get it. So don't hang any out," he said.

Brad Smith, a Riverdale farmer in Franklin County who lost hay to deer last winter, said he has accepted depredation as a part of doing business in Idaho and a few farmers and ranchers are giving agriculture a bad name.

He noted that only 118 farmers have filed depredation claims. "That is a small number."

Shelley plans new high school building

SHELLEY (AP) — By the fall of 1991, the Shelley School District hopes to have a new high school building.

Patrons approved a $4.9 million bond issue Tuesday night by a margin of nearly 78 percent, bringing smiles from district officials.

"We are really pleased that it passed by such a big majority," said School Board Chairman Merwyn Searle.

"That indicates to us that our community effort to sell the issue was successful. I guess the really pleasing thing about it is that there was no one area that went against it. It was a large majority all across the board."

The vote was 1,359-388 in favor.

He said the board plans to begin immediately evaluating possible sites.

Rexburg begins Snake flood watch

REXBURG (AP) — The National Weather Service has issued a flood warning for the Henry's Fork of the Snake River near Rexburg, predicting a crest of 10 feet by Friday.

The Henry's Fork reached 9.03 feet Wednesday, flooding low-lying farm land but causing little damage.

The Teton and Fall rivers, which empty into the Henry's Fork upstream from the gauge west of Rexburg, rose dramatically Tuesday. It takes about a day for those flows to reach the gauge, said Lyle Swank of the Water District 1 office in Idaho Falls.

"We're definitely going to get higher flows at Rexburg when the one-day lag reaches there," Swank said.

Madison County Civil Defense Director Ron Moss flew over the rivers Wednesday and reported no major problems because of high water.

Strong winds and rain pelted much of eastern Idaho Tuesday night, triggering a landslide onto Idaho 75 near Sunbeam.

Equipment kills farmer

ST. MARIES (AP) — A St. Maries farmer was killed when a hay mower and rake fell on him, authorities reported.

Joseph Withuhn, 58, was working on the swather Tuesday afternoon when the machine fell on him, hitting him in the head and pinning him underneath, the Kootenai County Sheriff's Department said.

Officials said he died instantly.

Group endorses Birds of Prey request

BOISE (AP) — The nation's largest conservation group has endorsed a request from Rep. Richard Stallings, D-Idaho, for about $1.45 million to begin studying the impact of National Guard training activities on the Snake River Birds of Prey Natural Area south of Boise.

Testimony from National Wildlife Federation President Jay D. Hair before the House Interior appropriations subcommittee last week indicated the federation supports the study plan and will not file suit against the Bureau of Land Management.

Earlier this year, the group expressed outrage that the BLM approved the Guard's right-of-way application to proceed with modernizing the firing range in the Birds of Prey Area. Federation officials said the study should have been performed first and that they were considering a lawsuit to block construction.

The 450,000-acre Birds of Prey Area is home to the world's largest-known nesting population of eagles, falcons, owls and hawks.

Hair, whose group claims 5.2 million members, criticized the BLM before the House panel.

"Because BLM is the federal agency responsible for the Snake River Birds of Prey Area, maintenance of the biological integrity of the area for birds of prey must be its primary function," he said. "Recent decisions by BLM to grant rights-of-way permits to the Idaho National Guard does not reflect this responsibility."

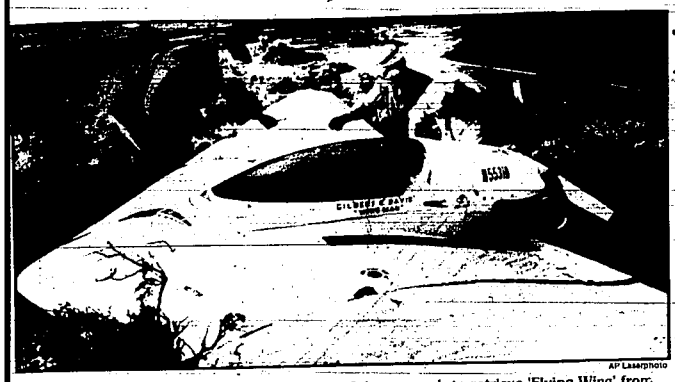

The four-year study is expected to document habitat losses from Guard bombing and training activities and from lightning-caused wildfires. Population levels of key prey species, such as Townsend ground squirrels and jackrabbits, also will be tallied as baseline data.

Hair said he also was glad to see an $805,000 funding request for the project from the Department of Defense.

'Flying Wing' crashes; pilot-designer injured

BOISE (AP) — Designer-pilot Gilbert Davis of Boise was listed in fair condition Wednesday after his experimental flying wing aircraft crashed Tuesday night.

Davis was found under the downed craft in rural Canyon County Tuesday afternoon near Thunder Ridge after crashing several hours earlier.

There was no immediate report on the cause of the crash.

Davis reportedly suffered back injuries in the crash and was taken to St. Alphonsus Regional Medical Center in Boise.

An earlier version of the flying wing plunged into the Snake River in 1987. A newer model made several flights this spring after Davis rebuilt it. The single-prop Starship Alpha, fired by a 40-horsepower snowmobile engine, flew 150 hours before its first crash.

Property owners have wells checked

POCATELLO (AP) — So far, 25 southeastern Idaho property owners have taken the Department of Health and Welfare up on an offer to check their wells for possible contamination.

The agency last week offered to check wells within three miles of three areas which might be added to the federal Superfund list of hazardous waste sites.

The federal Environmental Protection Agency has recommended adding 3,200 acres around phosphate and chemical plants to the hazardous waste site list. They are an area near the J.R. Simplot and FMC Corp. phosphate plants west of Pocatello; Kerr-McGee Chemical Corp. and Monsanto Chemical Co., both near Soda Springs in Caribou County.

Walt Poole of the Water Quality Bureau Pocatello office, said Wednesday preliminary test results from the wells should be ready in about a week. Wells tested so far serve residential, industrial and municipal customers, he said.

Women of Troy take park protest to courts

TROY (AP) — Three Troy women have resorted to the courts to reopen a battle over the sale of a downtown park for a new post office.

Inga Marie Swan, Erma Harland and Shelly Prater have filed an appeal of the city's February planning and zoning decision allowing the sale. They contend the Troy City Council made several mistakes during its public hearing process. The city has until May 22 to respond.

A campaign to recall Mayor Marie Vogel and the council this spring failed by a 2-to-1 margin, which was viewed as a mandate for the park sale. Another lot in town would be developed with the money from the park property.

Ms. Swan circulated the petition to recall the city officials.

Cambron faces sentencing in murder

BOISE (AP) — Sentencing is scheduled June 21 for Sean Patrick Cambron, who pleaded guilty to felony murder in an agreement with prosecutors for the shooting death of a pregnant Boise convenience store clerk.

Cambron, 18, entered his plea Tuesday before 4th District Judge Deborah Bail, but told the judge he never intended to kill Cheryl Hanrahan, 22, during an attempted robbery last fall.

"I know it was an accident," Cambron said, "and I just want to say that for me, because I know it was."

The high-school dropout told Bail he was broke and had no place to live when he walked into a Circle K. His plan was to steal enough from the till to move into an apartment with a teen-age friend and pay his share of the rent.

"It just looked like I had no alternative."

Concealing a .32-caliber pistol, Cambron entered the store on the night of Nov. 30 and placed a pack of gum on the counter.

Ms. Hanrahan rang up the purchase. Cambron pulled out the semi-automatic weapon and pointed it at her head. He told Bail he then heard a sudden noise and felt the gun fire.

"I was just getting ready to ask her for the money, but it happened too fast," Cambron said. "I felt someone was going to come in the store ... I didn't hear the gun go off. I just felt it."

Ms. Hanrahan was shot in the head. Cambron said he left without taking a dime. "Money didn't mean anything to me then," he said.

He was arrested Dec. 3 on suspicion of burglary. The story of the attempted robbery and shooting came out during questioning and Cambron was charged with first-degree murder.

His attorney, Ada County Deputy Public Defender Richard Toothman, failed recently in his bid to suppress a taped confession.

An accidental-shooting defense was possible against premeditated murder. But Toothman said Tuesday that he had little chance of beating an alternative felony murder rule conviction, which only requires proof beyond a reasonable doubt that the killing occurred during an attempted robbery.

In exchange for the plea to felony murder, Ada County Deputy Prosecutor Jim Dickinson agreed to drop eight lesser burglary, grand theft and petty theft charges. An enhancement alleging use of a firearm in commission of a felony will also be dismissed.

More significantly, the prosecutor will not seek the death penalty.

Lankford's attorney files execution stay

GRANGEVILLE (AP) — The attorney for condemned killer Bryan Lankford has filed for a federal stay of Lankford's Monday execution.

The application filed by attorney Joan Fisher seeks postponement of the execution by lethal injection until the U.S. Supreme Court can review the state court proceedings and appeals on Lankford's first-degree murder conviction and death sentence.

Lankford, 28, and his brother Mark, 33, both of Conroe, Texas, were ordered to die for the 1983 slayings of Marine Capt. Robert Bravence, 27, and his wife Cheryl, 25, of El Paso. The couple was camping on vacation along the South Fork of the Clearwater River in northern Idaho when the Lankfords entered their camp and beat them to death.

Mark Lankford's case is still on appeal.

Lankford is the third convicted killer on Idaho's Death Row to face execution this spring in the wake of a federal appellate ruling overturning Arizona's death penalty law because a judge — not a jury — decides whether death should be imposed in capital murder cases.

Idaho's law has the same provision, and federal district judges last month stayed the scheduled executions of Donald Fetterly and Albert Ray Beam based on the Arizona decision by the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in San Francisco.

A three-member majority of the state Supreme Court has ignored the federal appellate decision in appeals from Death Row inmates Jaime Charboneau and Charles Fain, although it ordered resentencing in both because of other errors.

The state attorney general's office has joined Arizona is seeking reversal of the federal ruling by the U.S. Supreme Court, but Idaho Solicitor General Lynn Thomas said he expects no executions in the state.

Fusion finders admit problems still plague some measurements

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Two chemists went before 1,800 colleagues to bolster their claim of achieving nuclear fusion at room temperature, but failed to sway doubters and admitted problems plague some of their measurements.

"I think they're clearly on the ropes at this point," physicist Steven Koonin of the California Institute of Technology in Pasadena said Tuesday after the presentation by Martin Fleischmann and B. Stanley Pons.

However, Koonin said the possible achievement of room-temperature fusion in an experiment by Pons and Fleischmann's scientific rival, Steven Jones of Brigham Young University, "is looking pretty good and there may be some real physics there."

There is growing evidence indicating that experiments conducted by Jones may have created room-temperature fusion, "but not enough to heat anything," Koonin said.

Pons, of the University of Utah, and Fleischmann, of England's Southampton University, announced March 23 that they had created nuclear fusion in a flask.

Such an accomplishment, if confirmed, could lead to a cheap, virtually inexhaustible source of energy.

However, Pons and Fleischmann are facing a growing number of critics who have attacked their experimental measurements and conclusions.

Their appearance Monday night at the Electrochemical Society Inc. meeting had been billed as the pair's opportunity to present new evidence to substantiate their claims.

Instead, Pons and Fleischmann acknowledged they may have made errors in their measurements of neutrons and gamma radiation during their experiments at the University of Utah.

"We are well aware these measurements are deficient," Fleischmann said.

He and Pons also said their most recent experiments yielded 10 to 50 times more energy than was consumed to operate their fusion device. In their March announcement, they said they had produced four times more energy.

Most efforts to achieve fusion have focused on forcing atoms together by brute force, using multimillion-dollar machines operating at extremely high temperature and pressure.

But Pons and Fleischmann claimed they created fusion by finesse, using relatively simple laboratory equipment to coax hydrogen atoms to fuse in a low-level electric field.

Their apparatus sent an electrical current through an electrode made of palladium and wrapped with platinum while immersed in heavy water, which is made with a form of hydrogen called deuterium.

Koonin said that while Jones' experiments measured atoms fusing at a rate of about one per second, the heat described by Pons and Fleischmann would require a fusion rate of about one-hundred trillion fusions per second.

Physician: Canseco surgery successful

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Jose Canseco underwent successful surgery on his left wrist Wednesday and should be able to resume playing for the Athletics in six to eight weeks, Oakland's team physician said.

Two orthopedic surgeons associated with the team took 1 hour and 45 minutes to remove the hook portion of the three-quarter inch hamate bone in Canseco's wrist, which he first injured March 7. The 1988 American League MVP was resting comfortably afterward at Children's Hospital of San Francisco, said Dr. Allan Pont.

Wilson's the one to beat ...

BUHL — Kade Wilson plays a lot of golf.

"We went over (to the Clear Lake Country Club) a couple of weeks ago for a match, and when we came over the hill there was one guy on the course, and it was him," said Jerome coach Dale Mowrer. "He spends as much time on a golf course as anybody I know."

Wilson, a Buhl High School sophomore who is the defending state Class B medalist, has been playing golf since March 1 and will play until Clear Lake professional Larry Francis, who coaches the Buhl High golf team, locks the gate in November.

Wilson explains he would have started playing earlier last winter, but he was busy with high school basketball.

"I play six times a week from the time basketball ends to the time school starts," said Wilson. "I'd play more in the fall, but there isn't time."

That includes, in addition to the high school season, the Idaho Junior Golf Association tour, which lasts most of the summer.

"I don't get tired of it," he said. "It's fun."

JEROME — Today will mark the seventh meeting this season of the five Class B high school golf teams in District 4, but the question is the same as it was when the current season started 10 weeks ago.

Which school has the better boys' team, Jerome or Buhl?

"We've beaten Jerome a couple of times this spring, but you'd have to say they're the favorites," said Buhl coach Larry Francis. "They're the defending state champions and it's their course."

Jerome, Buhl, Filer, Gooding and Kimberly will get together at 10 a.m. at the Jerome Country Club to decide which teams will advance to the state tournament on the same course a week from Friday. The three top teams and the top five individuals earn that distinction, or any team that can achieve a state-qualifying score of 335.

"I don't think anybody will do that Thursday," predicted Jerome coach Dale Mowrer.

Last year's rain-soaked event at the Clear Lake Country Club moved three teams — Jerome, Buhl and Filer — into the state tournament after the three tied at 344 at the end of regulation (Jerome won the tiebreaker). The margin doesn't

State qualifiers may be numerous in Class A golf

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

BURLEY — The Region III Class A play for this year's golf tournament is more than ambitious.

The five member schools — Pocatello, Highland, Minico, Burley and Twin Falls — all hope to qualify for the state finals by reaching the minimum team qualifying standard.

They will put that program into action at 9 a.m. Thursday at the Burley Municipal Golf Course, where the five teams held a tuneup meet last week and — more importantly — the state playoffs at planned for May 19-20.

Under the state qualifying rules, the region will advance its three low-scoring teams regardless of scores. The repercharge allows any team hitting 325 or better to also advance as a unit.

Without the recall standard of 325, the only way a non-qualifying school could be represented at state would be by an individual who finished within the stipulated parameters and simply play for individual honors.

"We feel we can qualify all five teams," said Highland coach David Dewey after that tuneup last week. "That's why we scheduled three matches here this year."

Although the weatherman was giving indications of cooler and perhaps wetter weather, the coaches were pretty well decided that if conditions became too bad, the meet would be postponed a day. Not surprisingly, the coaches were most concerned about the Magic Valley spring wind.

Should the plan fail or be foiled by weather, the coaches appear to lean toward Twin Falls as the slight favorite.

"I think that Twin Falls has won more than anyone," says Minico coach Bob Lantz. "We beat them once at our place and played within a stroke of them in Pocatello. Burley won over here and Highland won at Highland. I think, but I'm not positive, that Pocatello is the only one that hasn't beaten the rest."

Individually, a number of players could take the medalist pin. Burley Senior Eric Saxvik managed that trick last week and has the local knowledge to be considered perhaps the prime contender.

But each team feels it has at least a member or two who could take medalist honors.

Minico players enjoy Scott Condie's three-run homer against Buhl

Spartans barely get by Indians

By BRAD BRELAND
Times-News writer

RUPERT — Minico coach Cory Bridges wasn't prepared to give a season-ending speech, but he must have wondered if he needed one about the fourth inning of Wednesday's Region III Class A-1 loser-out contest between his Spartans and Buhl.

Down by seven runs at one point, the Spartans scored a run on a wild pitch with two out in the seventh inning to squeak out a 17-16 victory and eliminate the Indians from postseason play.

The season continues this afternoon for the Spartans in a loser-out contest in Pocatello against Highland. Senior right-hander Dan Poulton (2-2) will square off against Burley. That game will be played at 4 p.m. in Halliwell Park, with the winner to face Twin Falls on Friday for a backdoor shot at qualifying for the state A-1 tourney.

Buhl virtually seemed to have the game in hand holding a 12-5 lead going into the bottom of the fourth inning and a 16-11 advantage heading into the bottom of the sixth.

But the Spartans scored four runs in the fifth and three runs apiece in the sixth and seventh to win the contest.

Scott Condie's three-run, wind-aided homer and a two-run shot by Travis Schow helped Minico continue its season.

The game, played in high winds and

Error-happy Twin Falls loses title to Pocatello

By LARRY HOVEY

POCATELLO — The Twin Falls Bruins set the tone with a throwing error on the first batter of the day and saw their hopes for a repeat of the Region III Class A-1 baseball title dissolve in the torment of unearned runs and errors here Wednesday.

The Bruins, who have lost four of their last seven outings, were run-ruled 12-1 in five innings (four at-bats) by the Pocatello Indians, who clinched the crown and attending trip to the state tournament.

The Indians, riding the four-hit pitching of junior Scott Wolfenbarger, dropped Twin Falls back into the double jeopardy of having to win twice to even get to Nampa or Caldwell next week to defend their state crown.

The Bruins will host the winner of Thursday's Minico-Burley game at 4 p.m. Friday. That winner will go against the Region IV runnerup Monday at a neutral site, the survivor going to state where it probably will meet perennial contender Lewiston in the opening round.

The Bruins collapse defensively gave Coach Bill Ingram little room to talk around the game.

He was asked by a writer how he felt his charges had responded to the crucial situation of playing for the title on the road.

"That's just what we talked about down there (the first baseline at a team meet-

Burley eliminates Highland

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

POCATELLO — There might be those who would say that The 6-19 Burley Bobcats eliminating Highland 7-6 from the Region III Class A-1 high school baseball tournament would be unusual enough.

But when the Bobcats did exactly that Wednesday afternoon, it was one of the less strange items of interest.

Before that came word that Highland coach Zane Simmons, upset with some lackluster performances in a loss at Twin Falls Tuesday, was going with a totally new starting lineup — and wouldn't be changing it even if things didn't go the Rams' way.

Then there was the howling south wind that was at its fiercest in the top of the first inning, right when Burley was enjoying a four-run outburst. After that came some timely one-run playing and then a closing relief stint by the Bulldog, Rudy Ramirez.

The decision will give the Bobcats a homefield advantage today when they host the Minico Spartans in a loser-out game at 4 p.m. The winner of that one will travel to Twin Falls for a second chance at a state tourney berth against the Region IV runnerup Monday.

A reporter asked Coach Doug Bailey if it was especially exciting for Burley to win a tournament game.

"A win's a win — who gives a darn when or against whom?" Bailey answered with a laugh.

The key for Burley has been holding people to realistic run totals all year and, going against the Rams who had run-ruled them twice this season, the Bobcats knew the score.

Detroit Pistons stay undefeated

By the Associated Press

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — The Detroit Pistons remained undefeated in the NBA playoffs Wednesday night by slamming the door on Milwaukee's offense in the fourth quarter.

Bill Laimbeer, their biggest slammer, scored six of his 19 points in the final minute and the Pistons held Milwaukee to 11 points in the fourth period to beat the Bucks 85-80 in the first game of their second-round playoff series.

"The fourth quarter is when games are decided a lot of times," Laimbeer said. "Teams get tired. Guys don't take the same shot in the fourth quarter when they're tired and two guys are hanging on them that they made earlier."

In the last three playoff games, the Pistons have outscored the opposition 71-36.

Ricky Pierce, who came off the bench to lead the Bucks with 25 points, missed two free throws with 42 seconds remaining and Detroit leading 81-80, forcing Milwaukee to foul intentionally.

"I thought he'd make both free throws," Laimbeer said. "But he didn't. That's part of the game."

Pierce admitted he was tired at that point.

"I didn't put all my legs into it," Pierce said.

Laimbeer, who scored Detroit's final six points, sank four free throws the rest of the way for the final margin.

"I thought both teams played awfully hard," Bucks coach Del Harris said. "It's going to be rough, tough basketball."

The Bucks, who eliminated Atlanta in the first round largely on the strength of their free-throw shooting, missed seven of 20 free throws against Detroit and were outrebounded 53-31.

The best-of-7 series that resumes at The Palace on Friday.

"Detroit is traditionally a good third-quarter team and a very good fourth-quarter team," Milwaukee's Sidney Moncrief said. "We should have anticipated that a little better."

It was the fourth consecutive playoff game the Pistons held the opposition to 13 points or less in a quarter. The Boston Celtics had 10, 13 and 12 points in a period as they lost three straight games to Detroit.

"The thing I can't believe is that we held them to 80," Detroit coach Chuck Daly said.

The Pistons, showing the effects of an eight-day layoff, trailed by as many as 13 points. The Bucks held the lead from the 9:30 mark of the second quarter until Detroit finally went ahead 71-69 on a 3-pointer by Vinnie Johnson with 9:55 remaining in the game, concluding a 7-0 run to open the fourth period.

"At halftime, I put two things on the board: settle and work," Daly said. "A lot of things didn't work in the first half because of their switching and doubling. They do a lot of things."

But the Pistons, despite the layoff, appeared to be in better physical condition.

"We're in superior condition," Detroit forward John Salley said. "I think that's why Chuck had our workouts closed to the media. He had us running like from Kenya."

With Salley hitting two baskets and two free throws, the Pistons built their lead to 79-75 with 3:31 remaining. Then Detroit had a 24-second violation and a turnover and the Bucks got a 3-pointer from Jay Humphries and a basket from Moncrief to take an 80-79 lead with 1:53 remaining.

Laimbeer hit a jumper from the key for an 81-80 Detroit lead with 57 seconds remaining before Pierce missed his free throws at the other end.

"We got many opportunities in the paint," Milwaukee's Jack Sikma said. "We just didn't put the ball in the hole. Good defense does that."

The Bucks led 48-39 at halftime, but Joe Dumars and Mark Aguirre each hit four points in a Detroit run that cut Milwaukee's lead to 56-54 with 5:18 remaining in the third quarter.

But Pierce retained the hot hand with eight points the rest of the period and Milwaukee was ahead 69-61 at the start of the fourth quarter.

Pierce entered the game as a replacement for Moncrief with 2:49 remaining in the first quarter and the score tied at 17.

Reds hand Mets an easy win

CINCINNATI (AP) — The Cincinnati Reds want to forget this one — real fast.

The Reds committed three errors to let in six unearned runs in the sixth inning Wednesday night and hand the New York Mets an 11-4 victory in a battle of the National League divisional frontrunners.

The way the Reds played, Manager Pete Rose figured they couldn't even have beaten a non-existent team.

"You've got to catch the ball, you've got to throw it straight. If you don't you won't beat the Rhode Island Reds," Rose said.

They flat-out beat themselves Wednesday.

Shortstop Barry Larkin's throwing error let Keith Hernandez score New York's go-ahead run and fueled the six-run rally.

The loss dropped the Reds one-half game behind the San Francisco Giants in the National League West.

Larkin's sixth error of the season, on a potential inning-ending double-play grounder by Ron Darling, snapped a 3-3 tie in the sixth and was the first of three Cincinnati errors in the inning. The Mets sent 11 batters to the plate to score six runs — all unearned — on just three hits off three Cincinnati pitchers.

"It was embarassing," second baseman Ron Oester said. "Everybody was embarrassed."

Third baseman Chris Sabo followed Larkin's throwing error with a fielding error, his eighth, to bring in another New York run, and Kevin McReynolds singled home two runs with the bases loaded for a 7-3 lead. Reliever Tim Birtsas also had an errant pickoff throw in the inning, which was capped by Hernandez's two-run single — his second hit of the inning and his third in the game.

Howard Johnson's two-run homer in the seventh, his seventh; gave New York its 10th and 11th runs — the most scored this season by the Mets and the most allowed by the Reds.

The Mets were gracious in the giveaway victory.

"It's a funny game," Hernandez said. During the course of a season you're going to have days like that. Today, we're a baseball. You've got to say, That's one we got out of on errors."

During [illegible] seven hits and struck out [illegible] eight in six innings. The right-hander also fanned seven Reds in his last start, a no-decision in New York on May 4.

Rick Aguilera pitched the last four innings for his first career save in 27 career relief appearances.

San Francisco 4
Chicago Cubs 3

CHICAGO (AP) — Reliever Mitch Williams balked home Donell Nixon after Will Clark singled in the tying run in the eighth inning Wednesday night as the San Francisco Giants rallied to defeat the Chicago Cubs 4-3 and take over sole possession of first place in the National League West.

Williams, 0-2, replaced Mike Bielecki after Ed Jurak started the eighth with a single. Williams entered the game with 10 saves in 12 previous opportunities.

Brett Butler beat out a bunt between the mound and first, but Jurak was forced at third on Nixon's attempted sacrifice. Clark's single scored Butler and sent Nixon to third.

Bielecki, giving up six hits while walking one and striking out three, had the Giants shut out for 6 2-3 innings. But Robby Thompson's two-out double drove in a pair of unearned runs in the seventh.

After allowing a single to Clark in the fourth inning, Bielecki retired the next 11 batters before Ernest Riles reached safely on Shawon Dunston's fielding error in the seventh.

Bielecki then walked Terry Kennedy and wild pitched the runners to second and third. They scored on Thompson's double down the right field line.

Mike LaCoss, 2-3, pitched two innings for the victory, but was forced to leave after straining his left knee on the bases in the top of the ninth. Craig Lefferts worked the bottom of the ninth for his sixth save.

The final out came when Jerome Walton, who reached first on an error by shortstop Ed Jurak, stumbled and was tagged out as he tried for third on a pinch single by Domingo Ramos.

Montreal 10
Houston 1

HOUSTON (AP) — Tom Foley hit three doubles and a single to drive in three runs, and Bryn Smith allowed three hits in seven innings Wednesday night to lead the Montreal Expos to a 10-1 victory over the Houston Astros in a game marred by a bench-clearing brawl.

Smith, 3-1, walked one but didn't strike out a hitter as the Expos swept the three-game series. The Expos, who have swept their last two series at Houston, have now won seven straight in the Astrodome, dating back to April 30, 1988.

St. Louis 3
San Diego 1

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Joe Magrane pitched a two-hitter over 8 2-3 innings and Tom Brunansky hit a two-run homer to lead the St. Louis Cardinals to a 3-1 victory Wednesday night over the San Diego Padres.

Magrane's no-hit bid ended in the seventh inning on a one-out double to left field by Carmelo Martinez. It drove in Tony Gwynn, who had reached on an error, to tie the score at 1-1.

Brunansky hit the first pitch from Walt Terrell, 3-4, over the left field wall in the bottom of the seventh. Brunansky's fourth homer of the season came after Milt Thompson had singled.

Magrane, 3-2, had a career-high eight strikeouts and walked five. He was helped by four double plays. Reliever Todd Worrell came on collect his sixth save by striking out pinch hitter Marvell Wynne after Jack Clark singled and pinch hitter Mark Parent walked with two out in the ninth.

The Padres threatened in the second when Magrane walked Clark and Jerald Clark. But Magrane got out of the inning when third baseman Terry Pendleton fielded a grounder by Benito Santiago, stepped on third and threw to first.

Magrane, who had not pitched more than 6 1/3 innings in any game this season, was making his third start since coming off the disabled list April 30 after a bout with colitis.

Terrell allowed only six hits in seven innings.

Tigers stop streaking Angels

DETROIT (AP) — Keith Moreland's RBI single capped a three-run rally in the ninth inning Wednesday night and the Detroit Tigers beat California 3-2, ending the Angels' six-game winning streak.

Kirk McCaskill, leading the American League with an 0.87 earned run average, shut out Detroit for eight innings on five hits. Bryan Harvey relieved to start the ninth and Gary Ward led off with a single.

The loss dropped the Angels 1½ games behind pacesetting Oakland in the American League West.

Walks to Alan Trammell and Fred Lynn loaded the bases with one out and Matt Nokes hit a two-run double that tied it at 2. The Angels pulled in their outfield and Moreland spoiled the strategy with a single to the warning track in left, scoring pinch runner Mike Brumley from third base.

Guillermo Hernandez, 1-0, pitched one inning for the victory. Detroit stopped a three-game losing streak and won for the third time in 14 games.

Harvey, 1-1, took the loss, just the Angels' second defeat in 13 games.

The Angels' six-game winning string had been accomplished on the road. California was going for its first three-game sweep at Tiger Stadium since 1977.

Frank Tanana held the Angels hitless until Chili Davis led off the fifth with a double. Davis later scored on Lance Parrish's groundout.

Dick Schofield opened the California sixth with a single, stole second and came home on Johnny Ray's sacrifice fly.

Chicago White Sox 12
Milwaukee 2

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Ron Karkovice hit a three-run homer and Harold Baines had four hits as the Chicago White Sox beat Milwaukee 12-2 Wednesday, their fourth consecutive victory over the Brewers.

Chicago had a season-high 16 hits off five Milwaukee pitchers. The White Sox have outscored the Brewers 34-4 in the four games and outhit them 53-20. Chicago won 10-1 on Tuesday night.

Melido Perez, 2-3, allowed six hits over 6 1-3 innings. Perez, who entered the game with three straight losses and a 6.44 earned run average, gave up a wind-blown two-run homer to Robin Yount, his second home run this season, before Donn Pall relieved and finished with hitless relief, striking out four.

Teddy Higuera, 0-2, made his second start since coming off the disabled list following back surgery, allowing seven hits and five runs in 3 2-3 innings.

Kansas City 3
Cleveland 2

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Slumping Willie Wilson singled home the tiebreaking run in the seventh inning Wednesday night and Kansas City Royals beat the Cleveland Indians 3-2.

Bob Boone opened the seventh with a walk and pinch runner Rey Palacios advanced when Kurt Stillwell singled off pitcher John Farrell's glove. Wilson, in a 3-for-31 run and batting just .176, singled off Farrell's leg.

Jeff Montgomery, 4-1, pitched two innings for the victory and Steve Farr worked the ninth for his seventh save. Farrell, 2-2, took the loss.

Brook Jacoby's two-run homer lifted Cleveland into a 2-all tie in the fourth inning. Pete O'Brien doubled with one out before Jacoby got his eighth hit in his last 17 at bats.

Seattle 2

TORONTO (AP) — The Toronto Blue Jays, held hitless for eight innings by Seattle's Mark Langston, rallied for three runs in the ninth inning and beat the Mariners 3-2 Wednesday, with George Bell driving in the winning run with a bloop single off reliever Mike Schooler.

Langston had shackled the Blue Jays through the first eight innings, allowing only one baserunner, on shortstop Omar Vizquel's error in the seventh.

But in the ninth, Langston unraveled quickly.

Tom Lawless, pinch hitting for Lloyd Moseby, led off the inning with a solid single to center, ending Langston's chance to become the first Seattle pitcher to hurl a no-hitter.

After Nelson Liriano sacrificed Lawless to second, Bob Brenly, batting for Rob Ducey, doubled down the left field line, scoring Lawless and ending Langston's shutout.

Junior Felix then tied the score 2-2 with an RBI single to center, driving in pinch runner Alexis Infante. Felix went to second on the throw to the plate, and Langston was replaced by Schooler.

Schooler retired Kelly Gruber on a grounder to third and intentionally walked Tony Fernandez to pitch to the slumping Bell.

But Bell ruined the strategy, blooping a single to left, driving in the speedy Felix with the winning run, and pinning the loss on the hard-luck Langston, 4-4.

Before the ninth, Felix was Toronto's only baserunner, reaching first on Vizquel's error leading off the seventh. Langston then got Gruber to ground into a double play.

Before the ninth, only three balls had been hit hard off Langston.

Fernandez lined out to center in the first, Pat Borders lined out to left in the second, and Liriano, who has broken up two no-hitters this season in the ninth inning, flied out to deep left center in the sixth.

Langston struck out six.

Calgary advances to NHL finals

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — The Calgary Flames, the NHL's regular-season champions, got two goals by Joe Nieuwendyk as they advanced to the Stanley Cup finals for the second time in four years with a 3-1 victory over the Chicago Blackhawks Wednesday night, winning the Campbell Conference title in five games.

Brian MacLellan snapped a 1-1 tie when he tipped Ric Nattress shot past Chicago goaltender Alain Chevrier with 14:41 to play. Nieuwendyk, who scored the game's first goal midway through the first period, gave the Flames a two-goal cushion when he scored with 3:01 remaining.

The Flames dominated play throughout the game, outshooting Chicago 43-21. Only Chevrier's outstanding goaltending kept the Blackhawks close.

The victory was the Flames' ninth in their last 10 playoff games and moved Calgary into the finals against either Montreal or Philadelphia. The Canadiens, who beat the Flames in the 1986 finals, can advance with a victory Thursday night.

With 117 points — 51 more than Chicago — the Flames won the President's Trophy as the league's best team during the season. Calgary will have the home-ice advantage during the finals, which will start Sunday if Montreal wins Thursday or May 17 if Philadelphia forces a seventh game.

In the eight years that the NHL has employed the current playoff format, the Norris Division champion has never beaten the Smythe champion for the Campbell title.

Despite having the worst regular-season record of any Stanley Cup semifinalist since Pittsburgh in 1970, Chicago earned the right to play Calgary by beating Detroit and St. Louis for the Norris title.

Joel Otto started the winning goal when he won a faceoff and drew the puck back to Nattress at the right point. Nattress skated to the high slot and took a knee-high slap shot. MacLellan, who circled around the defense to the front of the net, chopped the puck out of the air and through Chevrier's pads.

Nieuwendyk put the game away when he snapped a 25-foot shot past Chevrier from the slot at 16:59.

Calgary took advantage of a Chicago giveaway 7:29 into the game for a 1-0 lead.

Defenseman Dave Manson fanned on his clearing attempt and Calgary's Hakan Loob gained possession at the top of the right circle. Loob faked a shot and then fed Nieuwendyk, who steered the puck into the net.

The Flames had outshot Chicago 12-3 at that point but were repeatedly stymied by Chevrier, a midseason acquisition who carried the Blackhawks through the playoffs. He finished the playoffs with a 2.00 goals-against average.

Chicago began taking the offensive in the latter stages of the first period, but Calgary's Mike Vernon made two big saves against Dirk Graham, the second on a breakaway.

The Flames dominated the second period but were unable to score, with Chicago killing off a five-minute major penalty to Adam Creighton for high-sticking Theoren Fleury.

The Blackhawks then tied the game on a fluke power-play goal by Mike Hudson with 1:12 remaining in the period. Vernon tried to clear Hudson's centering pass from the right corner, only to have it hit his stick and deflect into the net.

It was only Chicago's third power-play goal in 31 opportunities this series.

Camas, Carey fight for boys' track honors

By STEVE [illegible]
Times-News sports staff

CAREY — Camas County and Carey will culminate the battle for the Northside Conference boys track championship here this afternoon, but there isn't much suspense about who will win the girls' honors.

"I look for it to be real tight between Camas and Gooding State and ourselves," said Carey boys' coach Blaine Tingey. "Last time the three of us competed in a meet, we were all within nine points of each other."

Richfield, Dietrich, Bliss and Ketchum-Sun Valley Community School will also be on hand for the competition, which starts at 2 p.m. on the Carey High track.

The meet is the last of four weekly get-togethers among the Northside teams. It will have no bearing on qualification for next week's District 4 Class A-3 meet.

The defending league champion Mushers have come on progressively stronger over the past two weeks in the boys' division, beating Carey by eight points in last week's meet. The week before the margin was five points.

"We're going to have to do a little bit better in all events if we want to win," said Tingey. "Those fifth and sixth places are going to make a difference."

On the girls' side, Carey has grown consistently stronger, winning last week by 39 points over Richfield and the week before by 37 points over defending champion Camas.

Two key matchups on the boys' side:

• 110-meter hurdles — Carey sophomore Justin Bingham in the favorite in this event, but Camas junior Jerry Dillard came with .5 second of beating him last week and within .23 seconds the week before.

• Long jump — Carey senior Lane Kirkland has jumped 18 feet, 4 inches this spring, but three Camas jumpers have gone over 17 feet this spring.

Another important area will be the hurdles, where Camas has dominated the 4x100 meter run and Carey the 4x400, with the two middle relays a tossup among Bliss, Carey and Camas.

NEW YORK (AP) — The NFL's exhibition season will feature a pair of overseas games on its opening weekend.

The league said Wednesday that the 59-game preseason schedule will begin Aug. 5, with the Buffalo Bills playing the Washington Redskins in the Hall of Fame Game at Canton, Ohio. Later that night — Sunday in Japan — the Super Bowl champion San Francisco 49ers will meet the Los Angeles Rams at Tokyo.

Bucs sent Oberkfell to Giants

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Pittsburgh Pirates traded veteran utility infielder Ken Oberkfell to the San Francisco Giants on Wednesday for left-handed reliever Roger Samuels, who has spent most of his seven-season career in the minors.

Samuels, 28, was added to the Pirates' 24-man roster, but did not report to the team and will be assigned to Class AAA Buffalo as soon as possible, said Pirates general manager Larry Doughty.

Oberkfell, 32, is a 13-year major league veteran with a .282 career batting average. He was batting .125 with no home runs and two RBI in 14 games and was 0-for-2 as a pinchhitter this season.

An official announcement of the fight could come by the middle of next week. It would be Tyson's first fight since stopped Frank Bruno in the fifth round Feb. 25 at Las Vegas.

NW Nazarene drops four sports

NAMPA (AP) — Rising costs, no chance of increasing revenues and a plan to upgrade other sports has prompted Northwest Nazarene College to drop four of the 15 sports in its athletic program.

Acting Athletic Director Garry Matlock said wrestling, men's tennis, golf and junior varsity basketball will be dropped from the curriculum next fall. Financial aid will still be provided students on athletic scholarships in those sports, he said.

The private college with membership in the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics has had difficulty scheduling opponents because it is the only school for 300 miles in its NAIA district, he said. Nearby College of Idaho, also an NAIA member, competes in only five sports.

POCATELLO (AP) — The offensive coordinator at the University of Cincinnati is the new running backs coach at Idaho State University.

The Big Sky Conference school announced Wednesday that Dave Nickel will take over the assistant coaching job previously held by Walt Criner. Criner resigned last month.

Prior to joining the staff at Cincinnati, Nickel was the head coach at Westminster College in Salt Lake City and an assistant at Boise State University, the University of Montana and Long Beach State University.

Johnson steroid test positive

TORONTO (AP) — Chemical analysis has confirmed that Ben Johnson was using the banned steroid that cost him an Olympic gold medal, a chemist testified Wednesday at a government inquiry.

A government laboratory analyzed five vials of a milky white substance obtained last November from the teammate who stocked Johnson's drugs, according to Andrew Holmes, a forensic chemist with Health and Welfare Canada. Holmes testified the vials contained stanozolol and had properties similar to Winstrol V — a veterinary form of the synthetic hormone.

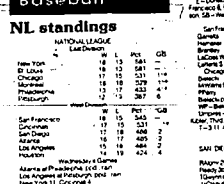

Numerous inquiry witnesses — including coach Charlie Francis and Angella Issajenko, the sprinter who surrendered the vials — have testified their supplier, Dr. Jamie Astaphan, told them the vials contained a steroid called estrogol.

Johnson has denied he knowingly took banned drugs.

Burley

"We figured there was no use saving anybody," said Bailey. "We decided to go with Tom Mesenbrink and anyone and everyone after that. Tom did a good job of protecting that early lead and late in the game we wanted to go with Ramirez because he's been throwing the best lately. We just put the ball in the Bulldogs' hands and he came through.

"But," Bailey quickly added about today's loser-out game against archrival Minico, "I don't know who we'll go with tomorrow. Maybe (Troy) Meredith. He pitched well Monday in the opener but we booted the ball around behind him."

Bailey said "I want to say something about Coach Simmons. The way he handled the situation gets a lot of respect from me. He could have dumped in the starters at any time and maybe pulled the win back. He knew he was going to be in a lot of trouble but he stuck with his guns. He's got my respect."

After it was over, Simmons and a large knot of Highland fans, parents and other coaches, spent 20 to 25 minutes discussing the situation.

"It got ugly a couple of times," said Highland boys' basketball coach Jim Ferguson but declined to elaborate.

Meanwhile, back in the windblown first inning, Burley began raising the possibility of this surprise. Jeff Gibbons and Brett Graham opened by getting on base and scoring when Mesenbrink singled and losing pitcher Tony Parker unloosed a wild pitch.

Highland, the defending Region III champion, ended the season at 18-7.

ing). I told them what I thought," he said declining to provide a short synopsis.

"We booted that first ball to (shortstop Matt) Rasmussen and after that I don't think we picked up a ground ball," Ingram said. Actually, the Bruins did handle two ground balls without mishap, a bunt to the pitcher and a bouncer to first baseman Bobby Jeneo.

"Matt mishandled four straight chances and the only reason the others did any better was because they didn't have as many hit to them," Ingram added of the eight-error performance.

Some of the misplays would have been unusual in Knothole league. In the third inning, Mike Van Brunt reached base on an error. Reliever Brad Herd wild pitched him to second and Van Brunt moved on to third when catcher Shane Quesnell retrieved the ball near the backstop and one-hopped it past Herd on the return throw. Two throws later, Herd wild-pitched Van Brunt home.

There were errors of omission, too, like a routine fly ball to centerfield that Shayn Wallace seemed camped under but then couldn't jump high enough at the last minute to keep it from becoming a three-run triple.

"It was just one of those days when everyone was hoping we could win but no one was doing anything to win it," Ingram said. "(Losing pitcher Jody) Bryant didn't throw a great game but when you're booting grounder after grounder, what's a pitcher going to do?"

Pocatello coach Rick Parkin was basking in the victory, noting "we haven't hit the ball well for about the last three games but we sure did today. Our kids kind of expected it because we knew we wouldn't be seeing (Brain junior ace Chris) Smith and guessed we would be seeing Bryant. Bryant beat us down there but we felt we hit the ball fairly well against him and our kids were confident. They didn't even want to take batting practice today," he added with a smile. "We may never take it before a game again."

The victory improved the Indians' record to 19-6, while Twin Falls dropped to 21-7.

driving rains, was unusual to say the least. Condie didn't mind though.

As he came into the dugout, Condie said he would hit one over, pointing to the left-field fence ala Babe Ruth.

"Let's just call that a west-breeze home run," said Bridges referring to Condie's dinger.

Schow's homer, which spelled the end for Buhl starter Mike Brady, brought the Spartans to within four runs of winning the contest.

"They just kept coming back. I knew we had to keep our heads in the game," said Buhl Coach Joe Shepard. "I'm proud. We played good. We hit the ball well."

Bridges agreed with Shepard's sentiments.

"They hit the heck out of the ball," said Bridges, referring to the 14 hits rapped out by the Indians. "And those were my top relievers."

Bridges sent three pitchers to the mound before he put in John Zamora in the seventh inning. Zamora made quick work of Buhl in the seventh fanning two batters, holding the Indians scoreless in the seventh, the only scoreless inning for either team in the contest.

Minico's winning run came in the bottom of the seventh inning on only one Spartan hit, a single by Daren Vandever.

Bridges used every player in his dugout as he entered and re-entered his players and utilized his speedy bench to the best of his ability.

In the bottom of the seventh inning, Poulton led off with a walk on four straight pitches and Vandever singled putting runners on the corners. Schow walked on four straight pitches loading the bases. Mike Price and Chad McCuiston followed with walks.

After Raul Zamora flied out, Bridges opted to try a suicide squeeze, but even that didn't work as Schow was picked off heading home. With Condie at the plate, John Karel bounced one in the dirt that went over Shane Wiggins' head and the due couldn't get the ball to the plate in time to catch Price.

Condie went 1-for-2 for the game and knocked in four runs and scored two himself. Vandever and Schow knocked in a pair apeice.

Wiggins was 2-for-3 at the plate and knocked in four Buhl runs.

The Indians' biggest outburst came in the fourth inning where they sent 10 players to the plate, scoring five runs on three hits.

Jeremy Schabot walked, Brady singled him to third and Troy Ruhter walked loading the bases.

Wiggins then cleared the bases when he lifted the ball over the center fielder's head. A three-base error by the pitcher helped Wiggins score and a catcher's interference on what was supposed to be a suicide squeeze allowed the run to score.

Buhl had the bases full with one out in the inning, but a fly to right field was caught by Eric Miller, who doubled off Darryl Lierman from first base ending the threat.

Minico looked as if it would breeze to the easy victory as the first three batters scored runs in the first inning. A two-run single by Miller and a run-scoring single by Poulton gave the Spartans a 3-1 lead after one inning.

"We looked past them," said Bridges.

The loss ended Buhl's season at 7-9, while Minico improved to 15-10.

appear that close this time.

Although the other three schools have played well at times this spring against Jerome and Buhl, it has mostly been against the Tigers' and Indians' junior varsity competition.

"We're looking pretty good right now, but so is Buhl," said Mowrer. "It depends who gets hot. If you have one kid who plays well, you can win it."

The most intriguing matchup will be between Buhl sophomore Kade Wilson, the defending state medalist, and Jerome senior Jacque Zahn, last year's district medalist. Also in the running are Buhl senior Robby Sauer and Jerome juniors Shane Burton and Chad Thompson.

There's no such suspense on the girls' side where defending state and district champion Buhl has, if anything, gotten better than a year ago.

"Buhl's girls are the best team in the state, I think," said Mowrer.

Junior Tara Cantrell, who won this tournament a year ago, sophomore Elizabeth Fennen and senior exchange student Camilla Astrom will vie for medal honors.

and shot-making ability — rarely a bad round, rarely a shanked drive, rarely an ill-advised iron shot.

"He doesn't hit any bad shots," said Mowrer.

Both Mowrer and Francis agree Wilson's poise is characteristic of good golfers twice his age.

"He doesn't do anything to get himself in trouble, and when he does get behind, he has the ability to come back," Mowrer said. "He keeps his composure."

"I just try to concentrate and get myself in a position to make good shots," said Wilson. "I think my medium iron (game) is better this year, I'm more comfortable with it, but this year I'm not driving the ball as well and I still need work on my putting."

Francis sees steady improvement in all aspects of Wilson's game.

"He's worked pretty hard on his shorter game, and it's improved," Francis said. "Kade's biggest strength is poise. He keeps himself out of trouble. At this age — if he keeps working — he has a lot of potential, no doubt about it."

Wilson will be the player to beat at the District 4 Class B tournament at the Jerome Country Club today and at the state B tournament on the same course next week.

"There's more pressure this year, I guess, because you're afraid you're going to falter," he said. "You just hope it isn't in an important match. I just basically try to stick with the same things."

Although there isn't as much pressure to qualify for state this year — three teams go to state from District 4, and Jerome and Buhl have played well ahead of the pack this spring — there's a lot on the line next week. Jerome is the defending state champion and Buhl finished fourth at last year's state tourney in Hayden Lake. Those two teams, along with another familiar opponent, American Falls, are expected to be the favorites this time.

"I think it helps to know the course and it helps to know the other teams," said Wilson. "But under high school rules it's different because so much can depend on the third and fourth players. I just try to be consistent."

Wilson said he won't have that medal in mind when he tees off at district and state.

"He plays well under pressure," said Francis. "He's just 16, but he can handle it. It doesn't matter how big the tournament is.

Wilson's progress in competition has been rapid, but it comes after nine years of driving, chipping, putting and watching.

"I started about 6 or 7," he remembered. "I used to come down to the course with my brother, and I just kept playing. I think I played in my first tournament when I was 7."

"He was just a little guy," recalled Francis. "I remember him from about the sixth grade. He stuck with it, worked hard at it. Anything he does, he works hard at it, whether it's golf, baseball or basketball."

Wilson is no longer a little guy — at 6-3, he played center for the Indians' junior varsity basketball team last winter — and Francis rates his growth potential as high, in both senses of the word.

"It surprised me last year when he won state as a freshman, but I won't be surprised by what he does over the next few of years," said Francis.

"Hey," said Mowrer. "He can come and play golf for Jerome anytime."

Burning permit rule goes into effect soon

TWIN FALLS — Burning permits are required for all fires in the state of Idaho beginning May 20 and continuing through Oct. 20.

Local areas affected by the requirement include lands administered by the Sawtooth National Forest and the Shoshone and Burley districts of the Bureau of Land Management.

Additionally, permits are required for burning on private lands within and adjacent to these jurisdictions. This requirement does not include farm land within Magic Valley.

According to Bob Powers, spokesman for the two agencies, permits for burning may be obtained by contacting local offices.

It is a misdemeanor to burn without a permit.

Work is already under way at Bear Gulch Campground

TWIN FALLS — Bear Gulch Campground on the Twin Falls Rand District (South Hills) of the Sawtooth National Forest is slated for major renovation.

The campground is located 25 miles from Twin Falls on the Oakley-Rogerson Road. Preliminary engineering work started May 1. The campground will remain closed until the project is completed later this summer.

Reconstruction will includes two units designed for campers with horses, eight family-size units, three barrier-free units for physically-challenged users and one group-site that can accommodate up to 50 people.

40-50 climbers to compete at Silent City of Rocks meet

ALMO — The Elephant's Perch of Ketchum will sponsor the City of Rocks sport climbing meet May 20-21 at the Silent City of Rocks just southeast of here.

Some 40 to 50 climbers, some from as far away as Australia, will participate in the two-day meet. Tony Yaniro, meet organizer, said Ron Kauk of California will head a strong contingent of top U.S. climbers.

The competition offers $1,000 for the top male climber and $500 to the top female.

Eliminations on dual routes begin at 10 a.m. on May 20 with the final rounds slated for 9 a.m. the following day.

Because the meet will be held on private property, a $4 admission and parking fee will be charged.

Registration will be held from 5 to 8 p.m. May 19 at the Tracy Store in Almo. In conjunction with the event, The Elephant's Perch of Ketchum will offer free demonstrations of climbing shoes.

More information may be obtained from Yaniro at 726-8195.

Idaho Forest Industries says it will aid elk management

COEUR d'ALENE — Idaho Forest Industries announces that it will donate $10,000 to the Forest Service to aid elk management efforts in southeast Idaho.

The donation will be used for guzzlers, or water collection and storage structures, designed to provide water in areas normally too dry to allow maximum elk use, including areas burned over in the Yellowstone fires.

Mike Welling, resource manager for the company, called the donation "an indication of our commitment to responsible resource management on Targhee National Forest."

Common-sense casting is the key to improved success

Casting flies can be an art

By JAMES KRUNICH
Times-News correspondent

Anyone who has done a little fly fishing, enjoys watching an experienced caster perform.

The line lifts off the water, bends gracefully in mid-air, straightens behind the angler and shoots forward — landing precisely at the chosen location.

Casting can be an art, a spectacle of beauty. But lengthy casts do not always indicate an accomplished fisherman.

One should consider that casting is only a part of fishing. For the most part, shorter casts yield the majority of fish — be they trout, bass, steelhead or salmon.

Species of fish that inhabit waters with current find obstructions in the flow that provide shelter. Obstructions break the force of the current so fish don't have to expend unnecessary energy.

A fisherman who systematically approaches a stream and casts to obstructions will automatically hook more fish since he covers all the preferred locations.

A technique called "dapping" illustrates that shorter casts are the odds-on favorite in regard to numbers.

Using the dapping technique, an angler generally approaches directly into the current or slightly from the side.

With line extending only a foot or two beyond the rod tip, the fisherman uses the length of his leader and the small amount of loose line to propel a fly into likely holding structures. Casts are limited to extreme ranges — to nine to 11 feet at best. The principle also applies to larger streams.

Frequently, fishermen are intimidated when fishing large rivers. Since the water is wider than what they're accustomed to fishing, anglers assume that long casts are needed.

Not true.

On a trip to the Madison, I learned the experience first hand. The Madison has some of the slipperiest rocks in the universe and the current can be treacherous.

Since this was my first visit, I mistakenly brought my usual waders, not fitted with felt soles or metal cleats. After several spectacular falls into the river, I opted to stay close to shore and not interfere with those in the party who felt comfortable wading to boulders in midstream.

After wading safely along the river bank for a few hundred years, I discovered that spunky rainbows and browns inhabited the flow not only behind the obvious obstructions at mid-stream but also behind the smaller rocks, rush and undercut banks that are a dominant feature of the stream bank.

By making short, accurate casts rarely in excess of 25 feet, I caught more trout than the brave souls who tried to float downstream in their waders.

Another advantage of short-casting involves not spooking fish. With a pair of polarized glasses, look into the water while casting. Invariably, close and long-range fish will periodically dart for cover.

The best bet is the line frightened those potential catches.

The word "lining" has actually been adapted into fishing terminology since the occurrence is so common. A shadow develops as the larger fly line passes over the fish before the taper, thinly constructed leader unfolds from the casting loop.

Unless the intended fish is at the extreme end of the targeted area, a shadow will frighten the intended quarry.

Also, if the fish is positioned to the side and not alarmed by the initial cast, the fly line will create a shadow on the bottom of the stream as it drifts backward or across in the current.

Although casting is certainly an important aspect of fly fishing, common sense casting is the key to improved fishing success.

Winter kill of mule deer increases for South Hills

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

JEROME — While no one considered last winter particularly tough, spring surveys of South Hills mule deer indicate mortality about three-to-one of the previous two seasons.

Randy Smith, southern Region 4 biologist for the Idaho Department of Fish and Game, said the post-winter counts compared to the early-winter surveys showed fawn-to-doe ratios had dropped by 59 percent in the three-month period.

He said pre-winter ratios in the last three years had been pretty close to 75 fawns to adults. In the last two winters, the fawn die-off has been around 25 percent. This year that jumped to the 59 percent figure.

"That 59 percent figure has to be put into the perspective that obviously some of the adult deer die as well," Smith said. "So the loss of fawns actually is greater and leads us to put it into that 75 percent area."

But Smith immediately cautioned hunters from turning to sackcloth and ashes.

"Our deer populations are so high that the percentage figure might overstate the loss," he said. "By using these counts, we are able to come up with a fairly reliable estimate of herd recruitment (herd growth). With the high populations, it means a 21 percent growth represents a lot of animals that hunters will see this fall as yearlings. We anticipate that this fall's hunting success will be very comparable to the past couple of years following the milder winters."

Switching units, Smith said appearances gave biologists an indication that similar mortality was sustained in the hard-pressed unit 45 — the area north of Bliss, King Hill and Glenns Ferry that is part of this fall's "extra deer" tag legislation.

"We do not have counts to substantiate any firm figures, but we were contacted by several landowners in that area during the winter concerning a large number of dead fawns on their property. One landowner found 32 on his place. So we feel that we did sustain a large winter loss in the area because of the large number of deer that were there."

In that instance, the die-off will help because the department's current goal is to whittle that resident and migrant deer and elk population by a small percentage of its current size.

Region 4 supervisor Carl Nellis earlier had noted that in the management of wildlife, the hunter harvest would be a substitute for the usual winter loss.

He noted herd populations before the coming of civilization had to be controlled through major winter mortality because there was little else to prune the herds.

He noted that allowing the hunter to take a good percentage of any wildlife population in the fall, gave a utilitarian purpose to hunting and really didn't infringe on herd numbers.

That same basis is used by people who are against winter feeding because it merely prolonga the inevitable die-off by maintaining herds at artificially high numbers until the major killer winter arrives and causes a high-profile catastrophe.

Goose count results are in for valley's wetlands

By LARRY HOVEY
Times-News writer

JEROME — Magic Valley's Canada goose flocks appear to be up a little along the Snake River but down on the Hill City Marsh-Mormon Reservoir nesting sites.

Randy Smith, biologist for the Idaho Department of Fish and Game, said the annual spring "indicated pair" survey has been completed and compiled.

It is not surprising that the northern three-year average was off. Last year a huge aberration showed up when 458 pair were counted on the high prairie waterways.

This was roughly 2½ times greater than any other year, leaving biologists to guess at the reason.

Smith said a probable cause may have been the drought which eliminated some remote, not-counted impoundments and concentrated the birds on larger water areas.

The count at Hill City Marsh, now officially called the Camas Prairie Centennial Wildlife Management Area, yielded 187 mated pair. The three-year average stands at 289 — but again that includes the aberration of 1988. The department's five-year

TWIN FALLS — Jack Dennis, guide and author, will be the guest speaker for the Magic Valley Fly Fishers banquet Saturday night at Canyon Springs Inn.

The event begins with a no-host bar at 6:30 p.m. with dinner to be served at 7:30 p.m.

Cost for the banquet is $20 per person or $35 per couple, those fees covering the expense of the speaker, a prime rib dinner and a year's membership for the MVFF.

Dennis has built up a solid background in fishing, starting his guiding career at age 14 and opening his first tackle shop at 19. He has sold more than 300,000 copies of his books, Western Trout Fly Tying Manuals I and II. He produces his own videos covering his travels throughout the U.S., Canada and New Zealand.

Dennis' discussion will focus on waters throughout the West, including Idaho's notable streams.

Tickets may be purchased at Ruel Stayner's Sporting Goods, Blue Lakes Sporting Goods, Canyon Springs Inn, the Oasis, Ram Sporting Goods in Jerome, Renegade Fly Shop in Wendell and Silver Creek Outfitters in Ketchum.

Tickets also may be reserved and picked up at the door by calling Rob Smith at 733-0038 or Jim Miller at 733-0743.

Hooked on fishing: Valley anglers eagerly await opening day

Warren Schoth
Fishing

The anticipation of the opening day of the general fishing season is like being 6 years old and waiting for Christmas.

For several weeks now I've had people calling, wanting to know if this or that stream is open or what weekend they can go to Island Park.

I used to get a little irate. I mean, for crying out loud, all they have to do is read the regulations.

Then I figured it out: these folks want to talk to somebody, anybody, about fishing. It is their way of getting psyched and ready.

People who haven't fished all winter are fumbling through the lures, the trolls, the flies and leaders. They are trying on sunglasses, hats and waders. A man back from a few months in Arizona stopped just to make sure his favorite color of flatfish was still being produced. People worry about things like that.

People also worry about their favorite waters. Did the drought ruin them? Is Fish and Game going to stock this or that water? Will there be any big fish left?

The regional department office is a good source of basic information.

Give them a call about your favorite fishing hole and they can give you a pretty good idea on water status, fish populations. Don't ask them when the tank truck is scheduled to dump fish. It isn't cricket.

They want you to catch fish and they want you to have a good outing. They may even suggest an alternative to your old favorite.

They don't want to make it unsporting. Be brief if you call because there are a lot of folks with a lot of questions on the line behind you.

Some of your favorite waters already are open but they are just starting to fish well.

By the time you read this, Magic, Mormon, Fish Creek, Carey Lake, Little Wood Reservoir, Salmon Falls Creek Reservoir and Reseworth should be starting another decent season.

Some of them were fished all winter — but opening day always sees a lot of new activity. They are year-round resources, but springtime is special.

In our area, there are waters that will open for the first time since November. Sublett and Thorn Creek reservoirs are small but favorites of a lot of spring anglers.

Stream fishermen anticipate openings of sections of Big Wood, Little Wood, Silver Creek, Malad and Billingsley Creek. Read your regulations carefully for tackle restrictions, special catch limits and catch and release areas.

Some of the waters in higher elevations may be technically open but marginal for fishing due to high flows and turbidity. I'd bet money that Rock Creek and Big Lost River will be out of shape.

East of Magic Valley is big on Henry's Lake and Island Park Reservoir. These are big waters, capable of accommodating a lot of fishing activity.

They are productive waters, exciting to fish. Henry's Lake has been getting better for each of the past several years. If you don't make if opening day, mark a place for it on your places to go and things to do.

If you wait until June 15, you can catch the opening of Henry's Fork of the Snake River and stampede to Harriman State Park.

With the expansion of year-round fishing waters, the huge crowds overrunning all waters is probably a thing of the past and no one I know missed the traffic jam from Twin Falls to Magic and Silver Creek of years past.

Saying that, I am glad there are waters that have had a rest, waters that I can anticipate — that mark my calendar for me and begin my annual renewal of a fisherman's rite of spring.

Enjoy your opening day. I know I will.

Habitat improvement draws praise

KIMBERLY (AP) — Although it's very early in the program, landowners are optimistic a new habitat improvement project will help pheasants make a comeback in Idaho.

"I did not hear a single negative remark...All cooperators gave Fish and Game as well as the Habitat Improvement Program glowing reviews, and when prompted, could not offer any substantive changes to the program," said a report commissioned by Sen. Laird Noh, R-Kimberly.

Noh, chairman of the Senate Resources and Environment Committee, commissioned an independent review of Fish and Game's program to improve habitat for game birds such as pheasant.

In a letter to Fish and Game Director Jerry Conley, Noh said the study gives the program high marks, although it is just getting started in some areas.

Money from the sale of upland game and waterfowl permits are used to cooperatively develop habitat on private land. A primary focus of the stamp money, and the reason for Noh's review, is the decrease in pheasant populations across the state and the resulting criticism of the Fish and Game Department.

Most farmers were involved in both seed and cover crop projects which had not yet become fully established. But the report said they were undismayed and the farmers planned to put even more land into the program.

"...once the crops take hold, it will mean an enormous comeback for the birds," the report said.

The review was conducted by a legislative intern who also has worked on the staff of Sen. James Mcclure in Washington.

The reviewer randomly chose names from a list of cooperators in each region of the state. Those interviewed included farmers, Bureau of Land Management workers and private landowners.

Participants were asked whether they were involved in food or shelter crop projects, if they considered them beneficial to pheasant populations, and the relationship with Fish and Game.

Park Service begins campaign to boost public wolf awareness

DENVER (AP) — In an attempt to dispel myths about wolves and win support for a plan to reintroduce them to Yellowstone National Park, the National Park Service will launch an unprecedented wolf awareness campaign this summer.

In June, 5,000 wolf education packets will be mailed free to museums across the nation and to all 354 national park superintendents. The remaining 25,000 packets will be available at no charge to schools, said task force leader Lorraine Mintzmyer, Denver regional director of the National Park Service.

Mintzmyer said the project involves no taxpayer dollars, but is being conducted with goods and services donated by 32 organizations and individuals, including Audubon, the Canadian Park Service, the Foundation for North American Big Game and actor Robert Redford.

The Park Service says too many Americans are afraid of wolves because of fairy tales such as "Little Red Riding Hood," "Peter and the Wolf," and "The Three Little Pigs."

"Most of the information about wolves that kids get and carry forward into adult life is fictitious," said William Penn Mott, who stepped down as Park Service director last month.

Mott convened a Park Service Task Force for Education on Wolves 18 months ago, and out of it has come the educational packet that will be distributed nationwide to teach children about wolves.

Each of the "Wolf Pacs" will include a teacher's manual titled "Getting to Know the Wolf: A School Outreach Project of the National Park Service." They also will include reprints of four wolf-education publications produced separately by the Denver Museum of Natural History, the San Diego Zoo, the National Audubon Society and the Teton Science School in Wyoming.

The four publications explain the role of wolves in nature and suggest the wolf may have been slandered by fairy tale writers.

The Park Service hopes the campaign will marshal support for a plan to reintroduce wolves to Yellowstone, some wilderness areas in Idaho and Montana's Glacier National Park.

Turn-of-the-century eradication programs wiped out the wolf in the northern Rocky Mountains, as bounty hunters killed off 81,000 wolves between 1883 and 1918. Wolves remain abundant in Canada.

The Park Service wants to reintroduce the wolves to enhance the ecological balance of some areas, but the proposal is controversial. Livestock growers fear the wolves will prey on their lambs and calves, and some people worry that the wolves will attack people.

Told of the Park Service's program, opponent Larry Bourret of the Wyoming Farm Bureau expressed dismay.

"These people say no one was ever attacked by a wolf," said Bourret. But he noted that naturalist John Audubon once cited the case of a man being attacked and eaten by wolves in Kentucky in the early 1800s.

Wolf proponents argue that wolves who have attacked people were rabid, or else the survivor lied. However, they are careful to qualify their statements. One article in the education packet says: "There have been no humans injured by unprovoked, wild, healthy wolves in North America."

Mott says visitors to Yellowstone and the other areas probably would never see the wolves, because they keep to themselves.

"But they will hear them howling, and I think that is the music of the West."

F&G chairman: Elk endangered

GRANGEVILLE (AP) — The increasing popularity of hunting threatens to hurt the size and vigor of Idaho's elk herds, which now are the largest and healthiest in the nation, state Fish and Game Commission Chairman Keith Carlson says.

There are 91,000 people a year hunting elk in Idaho now, and that number is growing at a rate of 8 percent annually, Carlson said Friday at the North Idaho Chamber of Commerce's spring meeting in Grangeville.

"The elk can't stand the pressure," he said, adding that something will have to be done to limit the number of elk killed in Idaho each year.

If action is not taken, Idaho's elk-hunting quality could deteriorate as it has in neighboring states. Carlson said Washington and Oregon have taken a good resource and quite literally ruined it.

The Fish and Game Commission has begun developing a new 15-year wildlife management plan that will replace current policy in 1991. Idaho currently has a mix of elk-hunting regulations that provides "a little bit of something for everybody."

Representatives of the U.S. Forest Service, the Rocky Mountain Elk Foundation, outfitters and guides, sportsmen and the general public will be invited to help decide how to avoid an elk crisis, Carlson said.

He said preserving the state's elk population is an economic as well as a ecological issue for Idaho. More than 13,000 people a year come from out of state for the chance to take an Idaho elk. More than $10 million was spent last year by elk hunters in northern Idaho alone.

Montana bison ranch planned

WISDOM, Mont. (AP) — A different type of bison herd is moving into southwest Montana, but the animals won't be shot by hunters.

The 200 bison scheduled to arrive this year at the King B Inc. ranch north of Wisdom are coming from Idaho, as part of a bison ranching outfit.

Roger Ball, the Idaho Falls-based company's principal owner, says 120 of the animals will calve this spring, and that they have been tested to make sure they're free of brucellosis.

Brucellosis, a disease that can cause domestic cattle to abort their calves, is the main reason for Montana's annual hunt of bison migrating from Yellowstone National Park.

The Legislature sanctioned the hunt to allow private hunters to kill the animals, which previously were shot by state game officials as a protective measure for area livestock.

State livestock and game officials have said the Yellowstone bison are infected with brucellosis.

Ball says he hopes to hold bison sales on the ranch some day and eventually build the herd to 600-800 head.

Bison used to run wild in the Big Hole Valley in the 19th Century, but were most likely killed off by the 1880s, historians say.

Chinook anglers want larger area opened for 1st season in 11 years

LEWISTON (AP) — Anglers looking forward to the first Clearwater River chinook salmon season since 1978 say they want more room than just the north fork of the stream.

Idaho Fish and Game Department officials have said they favor opening only the North Fork of the Clearwater to fishing. But the comments at a public hearing Monday night in Lewiston indicated fishermen want more elbow room.

John Patterson, an Idaho Steelhead and Salmon Unlimited director, asked that the department open at least a portion of the main river.

From reports he has received of the short stretch of Little Salmon River fishing near Riggins, "that leaves a little bit to be desired ... and that's putting it mildly," Patterson said. Salmon fishing is allowed on a very short section of the Little Salmon, congesting the banks near U.S. 95.

The department has made no formal recommendation to the Idaho Fish and Game Commission, which will decide where fishing will be allowed.

The Clearwater season is unlikely to begin until June 10, said Steve Yundt, anadromous fisheries coordinator at Boise. A season for the Little Salmon River may open earlier because fish arrive there earlier.

Dexter Pitman, the department's Boise-based anadromous fisheries manager, said opening the season on a wider basis could have far-ranging repercussions.

The chief impact of fishing in the main river would be that some naturally spawning chinook would be caught.

That could in itself cause a chain reaction that would lead British Columbia and Alaskan fishermen to renew efforts to claim tens of thousands more salmon in the ocean.

Ocean fishermen have been chafing about having to cut back their catches to help protect the Idaho-bound runs of chinook, Pitman said.

Patterson said he feared the department's plan to limit fishing to the Clearwater's North Fork could lead to crowds that would take the fun out of fishing.

"We agree wholeheartedly," Pitman said. "We're thinking the same way you are, maybe just on a little wider scope. But we can't do it if we jeopardize our fish. It just doesn't make sense."

Off-road bicycling gains popularity

By the Associated Press

First the oil embargo, then the fitness craze and finally a new style of bicycle all have teamed up to make off-road cycling one of the country's fastest-growing outdoor sports.

"Mountain bikes, or all-terrain bikes, have taken a lot of interest. They are selling like hotcakes right now," explained Andy Clarke of the League of American Wheelmen, the group founded in 1880 to promote and defend the rights of bicyclists.

A mountain bike is similar to a middleweight; with wide, knobby tires and as many as 21 gears. They have horizontal handlebars, so the rider sits upright.

"They're very comfortable and easy to ride," Clarke said. "If you know what you're doing, you can almost ride up a brick wall with one."

Although an estimated 88 million Americans ride bicycles at least once a year, according to a 1988 Gallup poll, and 20 million ride regularly, Clarke said off-road bicycling requires some care and preparation.

Start by visiting a bike shop, where a salesman can offer you the most cycle for the amount of money you can spend, anywhere from $200 to $1,000, and provide a bike that fits you.

"I would not advise someone to go out straightaway and ride a 10-mile trail, unless it's a properly paved trail," Clarke said by telephone from the Wheelmen's Baltimore headquarters. "It's best to ride around a quiet street somewhere to get a feel for the bike, get a feel for changing gears.

"That can be daunting if you suddenly find yourself with 18 of them and you're used to a 3-speed bike."

Although you don't have to buy expensive cycling clothes, "don't go out and expect to do it in a pair of jeans," he said. "Wear something practical for riding a bike that isn't going to make you too hot."

Finding a place to ride varies in difficulty with your location.

In California, Clarke said, trails are closed to cyclists unless the local supervisor opens them. In Washington, trails are open to cyclists unless the local supervisor closes them.

Park offices, U.S. Forest Service offices and local cycle clubs often have maps of available trails.

Clarke cautioned that bicycles can damage trails. He said cyclists should stay off trails when they're muddy, give hikers the right-of-way and don't go cycling off trails and damage the area around them.

Check the Sunday paper for any listing of a local bike club. There are 500 affiliated with the league and many more out there. Club members will be able "to pass along those survival tips you need."

Mountain bikes are geared low, almost like four-wheel drive vehicles, he said. "You're not going to go racing along at 20 mph. There are all kinds of skills that you learn, how to avoid rocks, jump over logs, tricks you learn with practice, but should be done with care the first time out."

Don't try for more than 25 or 30 miles on your first off-road ride. "That would be pretty exhausting. Don't try to do too much. Rest before you feel tired."

Goose

management plan calls for an average of 200 mated pair per year. Overall, the department feels the population is still a small percentage below the plan's goal.

However, Smith said an increase in goose production is anticipated now that a larger percentage of the marsh is under department ownership and will be managed for waterfowl.

In previous years, the area was allowed to dry out and hay was taken annually, leaving a minimum of habitat for nesting.

The department is spending this spring mapping marsh during different water-flow periods and documenting levels that can be expected with various dams, dikes and other water control structures.

This information will allow optimal habitat use of the marsh regardless of total spring runoff.

Additionally, the department has launched a major goose-nesting platform project which will add 50 to 75 structures this year for use next spring. Platforms have become one of the contributors to goose population enhancement, eliminating nest mortality to virtually everything but avian predation.

On the Snake River run — covering the area between Minidoka Dam on the east to Loveridge Bridge near Hammett on the west, the department counted 255 indicated pair.

This is another step upward as there were 229 counted in 1988 and 227 last year. It also increased the latest three-year average to 237 with the previous three-year average at 231.

The 11-year average, the department got into its good promotion mode, is 193 pair.

Smith noted that Rupert area sportsmen are participating with the department in another nesting structure project. These new platforms being slated for islands and shoreline along Lake Walcott.

The survey is called "indicated pair" because the number of actual breeders in a goose population differs from other, shorter-lived wildlife species.

Usually geese do not mate until their third year. Usually they mate for life. Sometimes, a juvenile pair will appear on a shore line and be considered a mated pair but they will not contribute to the reproduction cycle for another year.

Since the female usually is sitting on the nest, the aerial surveyor might spot a single goose in the water and from its action deduce it is a male hovering near the nest site. In such a situation, the lone male will be counted as a mated pair.

If the lone goose is one who has lost its partner for any reason, it goes into the reproduction book but yields nothing in reality.

Muzzleloader, archery art needed

BOISE — The Idaho Department of Fish and Game is soliciting entries in the 1990 muzzleloader and archery stamp art contests.

Winners received $600 for use of the artwork. Entry deadline is May 17.

The contests are open to all professional artists, defined as persons who derive income from artwork or have displayed art in a bona fide art show during the past year. Subjects should fight the nature of either sport and may be historic or modern. Sculpture or photographs will not be considered.

Entry forms and detailed rules are available by calling 334-3782. Winners will be announced May 19.

Crappie records continue to tumble

BOISE — Idaho's latest white crappie record lasted just one week when Jeff Grinstead of Lewiston caught a 14.5-ouncer in the Snake River near the confluence with the Clearwater.

The 11 3/8-inch fish was caught on a brown jig and six-pound test line.

Resident fisheries manager Al VanVooren of the Idaho Department of Fish and Game predicts the record could fall again soon. White crappies in the Snake River from Brownlee Dam to Lewiston should be of similar size, since they entered the system at the same time.

Telling the difference between white and the more common black crappies isn't really that difficult, according to VanVooren. Most obvious is the barring on white crappies which is actually a pattern of spots. On black crappies, these are randomly distributed.

When compared side by side, the white is often lighter in overall color but at this time of year the males of both species take on a very dark coloration typical of all panfish during spawning season.

The best distinguishing characteristic is the difference in the number of sharp spines in the dorsal fin. A white crappie has six spines, a black crappies has seven or eight.

The world record white crappies listed by the National Fishing Hall of Fame weight 5 pounds, 3 ounces and was caught in 1957 at Enid Dam, Miss.

Your Money

Maybe you need a fax machine for business

When your grandfather started in business, a telephone was just becoming a required part of his office. When your father formed his company, the facsimile machine was becoming commonplace. Today in my little office-at-home, I have a combination of the two — a telephone fax machine — that has become so common hardly anyone even mentions it.

Sylvia Porter

Why have faxes become so important? How do you know if you need one?

We live in an age where rapid transmission of information is crucial. Securities transactions are performed by high-speed computers executing automatic buy and sell orders more rapidly than their human handlers could. This was a big part of the October, 1987, stock crash and continues to spark worry among traders. Today, having information isn't enough: you must get it speedily to receive the maximum benefit.

Creative faxing – C10

Thus, there has been a proliferation of overnight mail services. Companies use huge computer networks to communicate coast-to-coast and even overseas.

Enter the fax machine. It is like a copy machine. In fact, many serve double-duty; also working as ordinary copiers, where the copy being made appears on the other end of a telephone line miles away. Copies of documents can be sent around the world in minutes. Until recently, fax machines cost thousands of dollars, but now the price has come down, and there are dozens of models on the market that can be purchased for under $1,000.

Because of the boom in fax machine purchases, side industries have popped up, some exciting, others annoying. For instance, a New England newspaper has just begun publication of a fax newspaper. Initially, fax supply companies would contact fax machine owners, sending price sheets and order forms. This was a convenience: a company could check its inventory of supplies, fill out the form, and send it back. The supplies and a bill would soon arrive.

But now have fax junk mail. All sorts of vendors ply their wares by uninvited fax transmissions. And the fax wave hasn't begun to reach its crest.

Computer authorities have come up with an alternative to the fax machine, one that can greatly reduce your initial investment if you already use a small computer. This is called a "fax card."

The advantages include low price and the ability to work with one machine — to compose a document and send it without ever leaving your desk. It's a great time-saver.

There are, of course, disadvantages. Some of the cards tie up your computer while faxes are being sent and, worse, stop everything while a fax is being received. You might face a frozen

Jeep Wrangler offers off-road fun at a price

By The Washington Post

The 1989 Jeep Wrangler Base is a security risk. Its two front doors don't lock. Its externally mounted engine-hood clasps can be undone by passersby. Its canvas top is a welcome mat for vandals.

The tailgate does lock. But why bother? No sensible thief is going to break through the rear when he can walk through the front.

Putting a big-bucks stereo in this vehicle is about as smart as flashing a wad of money at a seedy bar. Indeed, leaving anything valuable in the Wrangler Base gets you a dunce's cap. So, why buy this thing?

For the action. The Wrangler Base is the descendent of the Willys-designed General Purpose Car commissioned by the Defense Department in 1940. Like its World War II forebear, it's a tough, rugged runner, one of the best four-wheel-drive vehicles on or off the road.

To drive the Wrangler Base is to love it. But you gotta keep it in sight, or lock it up in the garage.

Background: All Jeeps now are produced by Chrysler and sold through the company's Jeep-Eagle Division. That's the result of Chrysler's 1987 takeover of American Motors, which had been building Jeeps since 1964.

The Wrangler Base is an entry-level Jeep, "priced to appeal to first-time four-wheel-drive buyers," according to Jeep-Eagle publicists.

The other Wranglers are the Wrangler S, a true stripper that's one step below the "Base" model and is practically impossible to find in showrooms; the Sahara, a sort of Banana Republic version; the Laredo for urban cowboys; and the Islander for, gulp, "the image conscious, younger, single, well-educated buyer who is an adventurous outdoor person."

Recommendation: Wranglers are designed to be open-air vehicles, which makes them prime theft targets. Consider buying something like a Kryptonite lock to beef up anti-theft devices. This is a telescoping, adjustable steel tube, the J-shaped bottom of which hooks around the clutch or the brake pedal. The top portion of the lock attaches to the steering wheel, making it difficult to move the car after illegal ignition.

Praise: The general toughness of the Wrangler Base surpasses that of comparable small sport-utility vehicles. "Entry-level" here doesn't mean flimsy. This is a pugnacious little rascal, ready to take on the snow, mud, rocks, hills, anything — except being parked overnight on a city street.

Head-turning quotient: The Jeep Wrangler Base is the Harley-Davidson of four-wheel-drive. It gets attention.

Ride, acceleration, braking, handling: Jeeps nowadays are classified as trucks, and the Wrangler Base certainly rides like one. But that's to be expected in a vehicle with a short wheelbase and taut leaf-spring suspensions front and rear.

Acceleration is quite decent, I must say. The Wrangler Base is equipped with a 2.5-liter, electronically fuel-injected, 4-cylinder engine rated 121 hp at 5,250 rpm.

Braking is good. Handling is fine, so long as you slow down around curves. The Wrangler Base isn't a racer. High-speed turns in this vehicle can result in turnovers.

Sound system: Standard monaural AM radio by Jeep. Not worth stealing.

Mileage: About 19 to the gallon (15-gallon tank, estimated 275-mile range on usable volume), mostly highway and driver only.

Price: Base price is $11,022. Price as tested is $11,691, including $134 for optional floor carpet and a $435 destination charge. Dealer's invoice price is $9,844.35.

Purse-strings note: Wrangler Base standard equipment includes a five-speed manual transmission, a "shift-on-the-fly" four-wheel-drive transfer case, an automatic front-axle disconnect system, a seven-year, 70,000-mile powertrain warranty, and a limited seven-year, 100,000-mile warranty on corrosion damage.

The corrosion warranty means that there is absolutely no reason to pay extra money for dealer rustproofing, undercoating or paint sealing.

Seniors may get 'Fannie Mae' loans much easier

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — One of the nation's major buyers of home mortgages announced that it is experimenting with new types of loans that could increase housing options for senior citizens.

The Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae), which buys mortgages from lenders and packages them for investors, said it has adopted new underwriting standards that will make it easier for senior citizens to borrow money in some instances.

"The elderly have very unique and different housing needs, and I think as a nation we need to begin looking at them in a slightly different light," said William R. Maloni, a Fannie Mae senior vice president.

One of the new arrangements would make it easier for borrowers 62 or older to build additions or "accessory apartments" to existing houses. Fannie Mae has increased the debt elderly homeowners can assume when they refinance houses in those situations from 75 percent to 90 percent of the house's value.

The self-contained apartments could be rented to generate income for the elderly homeowner or used to house an adult child of the homeowner. Alternatively, adults could use the self-contained apartments to house their parents, Fannie Mae said.

In a variation on the "accessory apartment" idea, Fannie Mae increased the indebtedness homeowners could assume from 75 percent of a house's value to 90 percent so they could build a separate cottage on their property for an elderly relative.

Fannie Mae said it also will increase the borrowing power of senior citizens who take on boarders in their homes. The rent paid by the boarders could be counted toward a potential borrower's qualifying income, thereby making it possible for senior citizens to obtain larger mortgages when buying or refinancing homes.

In the past, only individual homeowners were eligible for Fannie Mae-approved mortgages, but the experimental rules change that. Public agencies and non-profit groups, such as church organizations, would be able to buy homes to rent to senior citizens and borrow against the income from the senior-citizens' rent payments.

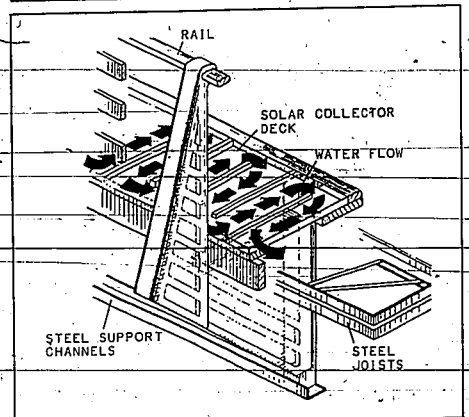

A fourth new loan package would increase the amount of money a purchaser could borrow to buy a house from a senior citizen if the buyer agreed to lease the house back to the senior citizen for at least five years. Those arrangements would allow elderly homeowners to stay in their homes while using the income from the sale to support themselves, Fannie Mae officials said. Public agencies, non-profit groups, relatives and investors alike could buy houses from senior citizens through this program, Fannie Mae officials said.

The so-called sale-leaseback arrangement is in some ways similar to the reverse mortgage, another kind of loan that has been a subject of experimentation among lenders. Both are designed to help cash-poor but equity-rich senior citizens convert the value tied up in their houses into income.

The four mortgage products Fannie Mae unveiled last week have only been available from lenders "on a spot basis," Fannie Mae spokesman Gene Eisman said. By enabling lenders to sell such mortgages to an investor, Fannie Mae hopes to make them more widely available, Eisman said.

Fannie Mae has set aside $100 million — enough money to buy 1,300 to 1,400 mortgages — to test the market for the senior-citizen loans. The next few months should reveal whether there is a heavy demand for them, Maloni said.

Cut your utility bill

Solar deck can heat, cool pool water in limited space

Let the sun help heat your backyard pool

Q — I am interested in building an above-ground swimming pool myself to lower the cost. I want to use some type of inexpensive heating system to extend the swimming season. What are some do-it-yourself options? E. W.

James Dulley

A — Building a do-it-yourself swimming pool kit can greatly reduce the cost. You and a few friends should be able to build one in a weekend. Providing supplemental heat for the water, with either solar, gas, or electricity, can substantially extend the length of your swimming season.

There are several options for keeping the water warm without doubling your summertime utility bills. A combination of do-it-yourself solar heat, a removable pool cover, and proper landscaping is effective.

Swimming pool solar systems are the easiest type to build yourself. Since they operate at relatively low temperatures, even very simple and crude systems can be effective and efficient.

There are above-ground swimming pool kits with a special deck that also functions as solar collectors. The deck is made of special hollow channels for the water flow, but it looks and feels just like an ordinary pool deck. Since the pool water flows through it and carries the sun's heat to the pool, the deck stays more comfortably cool on your feet.

Once you have assembled the pool and deck, you have the option of using the deck for the solar system. You just hook up a kit containing some valves and flexible hoses from the water filtration system to the deck. The filtration pump circulates the pool water through the deck.

If your pool water gets uncomfortably warm in the summer, you can also use the solar system to cool the water. By letting the pool water circulate through the collectors or deck at night,

Good luck to anyone who blames failure on others

Minneapolis millionaire Percy Ross is internationally known for his philanthropic works and likes to encourage others to help solve problems for those in need. He has earned a fortune and a wealth of knowledge during his lifetime and wants to share both before his death. His motto is: "He who gives while he lives ... also knows where it goes."

Percy Ross

Mr. Ross: I pleaded with you twice before when I desperately needed cash to save my business. You didn't even extend me the courtesy of a reply, let alone the help.

Well, thanks to you, I've been out of business for two months now. You are a fake and a phony, and your tactics must be exposed. I'm sure a lot of poor folks are hurt by your rudeness and deception.

—Mr. S.G., Mt. Carmel, Ill.

Dear Mr. G.: I understand human nature well enough to know that when things go badly we need someone to blame. It's OK for you to make me the scapegoat for your failure, but should that be the case, do me just one favor.

Turn your situation around, if only to spite me. Who knows, maybe a year from now you'll write back and thank me because I gave you the opportunity to do it all on your own. Just remember — failure is never fatal, and success is never final.

Good luck.

Dear Mr. Ross: My request is for a hospital patient who has multiple sclerosis. She has been prescribed bilateral foot braces by her physician. I checked with Medicaid, and they won't pay for them. I contacted the Multiple Sclerosis Society, and they won't pay for them. I contacted the Social Services Department at our hospital, and they won't pay for them either.

Frankly, I'm tired of hearing who won't help and am only interested in those who will. Then I remembered your name and knew your helped deserving people.

I called the Bremer Brace Co. and learned the cost would be roughly $260. Please be the one that can grant this simple, but much needed, request for a worthy patient.

—Ms. N.A., Jacksonville, Fla.

Dear Ms. A.: So after being denied from three other sources, my name came to your mind. In other words, I may not have been your first choice, but I think you'll agree — I turned out to be your best choice.

That's because the "Percy Ross Agency of Human Resources" just approved your request. The best part — no paper work and no red tape is involved, just endorse my forthcoming check to the medical supplier, and the braces are yours for the asking.

Thanks for caring enough about this patient and not giving up on her needs until they were met.

Dear Mr. Ross: I have started to write this letter many times and I keep backing out. I have never asked for help in all my 68 years. Now it has come to this, and I'm very ashamed.

What I need is a wheelchair in good working condition, for the one I have is worn out. It was secondhand when I bought it. Now the tires are both bad, and it steers to the left all the time. The seat and back are worn out, and I don't believe it could be fixed up even if I had the money.

My oldest sister died last year. The only one left was my pop who was nearly 91, and he died a few months ago. Now I'm all alone.

If you get me a wheelchair, I'd pay you back a little at a time. I get $260 Social Security and would try to send you at least $10 a month from it. If you can possibly manage to help me, Mr. Ross, bless you.

—Ms. M.F., Franklin, Ind.

Dear Ms. F.: It was difficult for you to ask for help, but you did. And, in order to ease the burden of having done so, you are offering me $10 a month repayment for a wheelchair I might "possibly" purchase for you.

Well, scratch the "possibly," and let's make it a reality, because you're getting a wheelchair. There's one stipulation though: You must receive it with the understanding that I OWE YOU!

As your fellow man, I'm obligated to help you achieve the best quality of life possible as long as I'm able to afford it. Thanks for writing.

You may write to Percy Ross c/o The Times-News, P.O. Box 35000, Minneapolis, Minn. 55435. Include a telephone number if you wish. All letters sent to Mr. Ross are read. Only a few are answered in this column, although others may be acknowledged privately.

Prospective investors can educate themselves

YOUR MONEY

By Carla Lazzareschi

Q: I recently bought shares in two different companies. When I receive my statements, I am not fully confident that I understand them. Also, I would like to become more active in the stock market, but I feel hampered by my lack of understanding of the market's workings. Are there any publications aimed at the average reader who wants to understand the stock market?

A: There are many such publications. For starters, you can ask one or more of the national stock brokerages for their brochures written for new investors. All you have to do is call a local branch office and request the pamphlet; typically, there is no charge. However, be prepared for a follow-up call from a broker looking for your business; nothing in life is completely free.

The stock exchanges themselves are another good source of information. For example, the New York Stock Exchange publishes an Investors Information Kit, a fairly extensive guide for the beginning investor. The price is $10, including postage and handling. You may obtain one by writing to the exchange at 1 Underhill Blvd., Syosset, N.Y. 11791.

Finally, your local public library should have a shelf full of books on business and investing. Our experts say that the following titles are among the best for the novice investor: "Understanding Wall Street," by Jeffrey B. Little and Lucien Rhodes; "How to Read and Understand the Financial News," by Gerald Warfield, and "A Random Walk Down Wall Street," by Burton Malkiel.

Q: I use my vehicle during the normal course of my job, and I am reimbursed by my employer at the rate of 20.5 cents per mile. May I depreciate my vehicle, and if so, how should I do it?

A: Yes, you may depreciate the value of your car. But, he advised: It is not going to be easy. The formulas are detailed and complicated, and, in the event of a tax audit, you should be prepared to produce precise records chronicling where and when you drove your car on business and how much money you spent maintaining it.

Although there are several automobile expense deduction systems available to the taxpayer, by far the easiest is the standard mileage rate deduction: 24 cents per business mile for the first 15,000 business miles you drive; 11 cents thereafter. But if you want to depreciate your vehicle, you must use what the IRS calls the "actual expense" method.

To employ the actual expense system, you will first need to determine the fair market value of your vehicle at the time you started using it for business. If you are just beginning to depreciate your car, the IRS says you must use a five-year schedule. For the first year, the IRS allows you to depreciate the vehicle by 20 percent of its fair market value, if you used it for business for more than 50 percent of miles driven. If you used it for business 50 percent or less, then the depreciation rate is 10 percent. In either case, the maximum amount for the first year is $2,560. (That limit was installed to curb the number of taxpayers claiming their luxury cars as business vehicles.)

Now, you must determine what percentage of the time you have driven your car for business, compared to personal use of the vehicle. Multiply your allowed depreciation by that percentage to arrive at your allowed business depreciation. Let's say you are entitled to depreciate your car by $2,000 in 1988 and the car was used for business 50 percent of the time. You're entitled to $1,000 depreciation. But don't stop here.

Now, you have to total your annual costs of maintaining your vehicle. Include all expenses: gas, oil, maintenance, insurance, repairs and other operating expenses. (That is why you must keep careful records.) Multiply the total by 50 percent, since you use your car only half the time on business. Let's say you had $5,000 in expenses; the share allocated to your business use would be $2,500. Including depreciation, the total is now $3,500.

However, you must now subtract the amount of mileage reimbursement you received from your employer. Any excess expense is considered a miscellaneous deduction and is added to the rest of your miscellaneous deductions. (Any excess reimbursement is considered ordinary income and you must report it.)

But, beware: Miscellaneous expenses are deductible on your income taxes only to the extent that they exceed 2 percent of your adjusted gross income. So, after doing all these mathematical computations, you may very well find that you really don't have anything, including depreciation, to deduct at all.

By the way, if your employer lists your mileage reimbursement on your W-2 statement of salary and wages, you are allowed to deduct — dollar for dollar — up to that amount. But any expenses incurred above the reimbursement level is subject to the 2 percent limit.

Use IRS Form 2106 to compute your deduction, and read the instructions carefully. You may also want to read a fuller explanation of the depreciation and business auto expense deductions in one of the many income tax manuals available at book stores and your public library.

Q: I am 56 years old and am taking early retirement from my job. If I receive a lump-sum distribution from my pension plan and immediately roll it over into an individual retirement account, may I immediately begin drawing an annual disbursement without penalty, just as if I were age 59½?

A: Yes, you may. The Internal Revenue Service will waive the 10 percent early withdrawal penalty from IRAs under one circumstance: The amount of the disbursements you take must be calculated according to the life expectancy tables for your age — 56 in your case — not that of a 59½-year-old, the age at which withdrawals are otherwise allowed to begin.

According to the latest tables, the life expectancy of a 56-year-old person is 27.7 years; for a 59½-year-old, it's 25 years. To calculate your annual disbursement, divide the total balance in all of your IRA accounts by your life expectancy — or; if you want, your life expectancy and that of the beneficiary, or beneficiaries, on your IRA accounts. Once you reach age 59½, you may withdraw more funds from your IRA accounts without penalty — but never less than the life expectancy amount.

Chain letters are definitely illegal

BBB Better Business Bureau

Q. I just received a chain letter that states I can get many free tea towels if I don't break the chain. Surely it isn't against the law to exchange tea towels. Or is it? I don't want to do it if it is illegal.

A. Yes, it is illegal. Spring seems to be the best time for chain letters to multiply like rabbits, and we have had several calls on the tea towel chain and others similar to it.

The laws governing chain letters from the Post Office state the following: "If the customer has to spend money, buy something to mail (such as post cards) or send cash, and depend upon other people fulfilling the chain in order for him to make any money, the letter is an illegal chain letter."

Therefore, if you have to buy tea towels to mail and you depend on others not to break the chain, then you know that it is illegal.

Q. This may seem like a stupid question, but I've been sending back the Readers Digest Sweepstakes for years just in case I might be lucky enough to win a big prize. Do I stand any chance of winning?

A. You have a much better chance of being hit by lightning or hijacked by a terrorist.

Here are the odds for three of the most famous sweepstakes, according to Columbia University statistics:

Reader's Digest: Chance of winning $5 million is 1 in 113 million; 2 prizes of $25 million are 1 in 56 million; 3 prizes of $15,000 are 1 in 37 million; 10 prizes of $10,000 are one in 11 million; 50 prizes of $1,000 are 1 in two million; 250 prizes of $200 are 1 in 452,000; and 37,750 prizes of $20 are 1 in 2,993.

Publisher's Clearing House: Chances are 1 in 122 million to win either $60,000, $30,000, $15,000, $7,500, $5,000 or $1,000. Lowest prizes of $5 are 1 in 2,869.

American Family Publishers: Odds of winning the $100,000 grand prize or 365 other $10 prizes are the same — 1 in 30 million.

You will probably never win and nobody you know will win, but it only costs a 25-cent stamp to dream big.

Insurance industry peace try backfires; consumers irate

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The insurance industry, trying to regain public esteem in a bruising battle with consumer groups, has made a pence offering that so far only seems to have escalated the war.

The proposed truce came in the form of a 14-point plan to reduce high car insurance costs, which have sparked nationwide consumer protests and tough state laws in California and elsewhere designed to cap the rising rates.

"We're recommending a truce in the war of words between our industry and consumer leaders around the nation," said Franklin W. Nutter, president of the Alliance of American Insurers, which represents property and casualty insurance companies. "We want a truce in the politics of confrontation."

Nutter said at a Washington news conference Thursday that his group devised the plan after meeting with consumer groups and listening to their complaints.

Consumer leaders interpreted Nutter's comments as a suggestion that they and AIA had reached an agreement over their differences, and that the consumer leaders, in effect, supported the 14-point plan. The consumer groups were outraged.

"This is totally bogus," said Robert Hunter, president of the Alexandria, Va., -based National Insurance Consumer Organization.

"We had one meeting with those characters and now they're making it sound like we had a lifelong relationship," Hunter said. "The insurance industry keeps blaming everyone for the high prices except themselves. There can be no truce, no solution until the industry recognizes that it's the problem."

Joan Claybrook, president of Public Citizen, a Washington-based consumer group that participated in the meeting last February, also criticized the AIA plan.

Among other things, the proposal suggests ways that the industry and consumer groups can work together to reduce vehicle repair costs and to lower medical and legal bills that often boost the price of settling vehicle accident claims.

The plan comes after an industry defeat last year in California, where voters approved Proposition 103 to roll back insurance rates and increase government regulation of insurance companies in the state.

The Proposition 103 rebellion is sparking consumer uprisings across the country. In Maryland, for instance, vehicle owners pay an average $597 annually for auto insurance coverage — the sixth highest rate in the nation, according to industry figures.

Claybrook contended that those premiums could be reduced by at least 25 percent if insurance companies were willing to cut unnecessary administrative costs and lower their estimates of financial reserves needed.

"The fact that they question our sincerity is unfortunate," Nutter said when told of the consumer leaders' reaction to his group's proposals.

Nutter said that he was not trying to suggest that a coalition had been formed between the insurance industry and consumer groups.

Bonds Often Predict Stock Market Movement

A stockholder owns part of the corporation in which he or she invests. With this ownership comes the rewards of success and the risks of failure. Owners of common stock accept this risk, along with less or no income, in hopes of lucrative future gains.

Bond owners, on the other hand, are lenders. They choose to invest where income is safe and all their principal will be returned at a specified future date.

Because of these two diverse investment philosophies, owning vs. loaning, some investors view stocks as risky and bonds as safe. As with most generalities, this is only partially correct as both offer some risk. In practice, however, there is a relation between stock and bond prices. A lot can be learned about stocks by watching bonds.

To appreciate this, first understand what makes bond prices move. Bond prices reflect interest rates. When interest rates rise, bond prices drop. Conversely, when interest rates drop, bond prices rise.

For example, if you own a $1,000 bond paying 9 percent, you receive $90 interest each year. If rates rise to 12 percent, new bonds would pay $120 interest each year. As a result, to sell your bond with $30 less income, you must discount it and lose some of your original investment.

On the other hand, if rates fall to 6 percent, your $90 income is very attractive compared to the new $60 rate. Your bond becomes more valuable, and the market price increases.

Although bonds are guaranteed to return principal at maturity, until then the market value changes with interest rates. That means if you decide to sell your bond before it matures, you may receive more, less, or the same amount you paid for your bond. Your original investment, or face value, is not guaranteed before maturity.

Because bonds are bought primarily for income, the market value reflects changing interest rates more quickly than stocks. Stock prices, however, are also sensitive to interest rates and follow bond prices — only a bit slower.

Watch the relationship. When interest rates rise, bond prices fall. Generally, high interest rates hurt business and slow economic expansion. This causes corporate earnings to drop and eventually brings stock prices down.

When interest rates drop, bond prices rise. Low interest rates usually stimulate business, and stock prices react upward following the bond market.

Although this is an oversimplification, a close study of the stock/bond market price activity bears it out. The latest example showed that six months prior to the October 1987 crash, the average municipal-bond mutual fund lost about 6.5 percent in value. Corporate-bond funds lost about 5.5 percent. The bond market was suggesting that in the near future, we might expect a corresponding drop in stock prices. An overly severe drop in the stock market did occur. Although it adjusted to a more reasonable correction, it was in fact a drop in stock prices.

This is not to encourage investment decisions based solely on the bond markets movement. Analysts who foster the bond/stock relation temper their decisions with an understanding of bond prices and yields in relation to the inflation rate and yield gaps between bonds and stocks.

The point is simply that there's a relation between bond and stock prices. If you're an investor who's sometimes confused as to where the economy is heading, keep an eye on the bond market. You could get a good tip on the stock market.

keyboard or even a lost project when someone decides to fax something to you. And if your computer breaks down and you have a fax card, you've lost two important business machines instead of one.

Should you have a fax machine? Some questions to ask yourself:

•Do you often use overnight delivery services to send just a few pages across town or across the country?

•Is this service costing you more than you would spend on a fax machine and its supplies?

•Are you often asked for your fax number?

•Do you frequently find projects temporarily stalled while you await the arrival of information that could be faxed to you in minutes?

Another consideration if you contemplate entering the fax world is whether to have an additional, fax-only telephone line installed. Many businesses do this, but it isn't always necessary. It's possible to have a fax machine hooked up to your regular telephone line, turning it on only when you plan to send a fax or when you expect one. Only you can weigh the inconvenience against the savings.

If you are considering a fax machine, avoid off-brand machines that use non-standard paper rolls. These could disappear from the market.

As with any relatively new technology, it become an issue whether to invest in equipment now, and get in on the leading edge to gain competitive advantage — and risk buying equipment that may soon become obsolete — or to wait for the wonders that likely are just a few months or years away.

But it's clear that fax machines have become a standard business tool. The question now is not whether you need one. The question is only when.

particularly on a clear night, heat radiates from the collectors to the sky.

Using a special plastic bubble-type swimming pool cover is another inexpensive heating method. Much pool water heat loss is from evaporation of the water. Covering the pool when it's not in use reduces the evaporation and allows the sun's heat to pass through into the water. This also reduces the amount of chemicals you have to add to the water.

You can plant low evergreen shrubs around the north and northwest sides of your pool. These shrubs block the force of the cooler fall and winter winds, but they won't block the sun from the south.

You can write to me for UTILITY BILLS UPDATE No. 372 for information on do-it-yourself solar deck systems, and lists of manufacturers of above-ground swimming pool kits, solar collectors of do-it-yourself systems, and bubble-type pool covers. Please include $1 and a self-addressed envelope.

Q — If you had to select the three best low-cost home energy improvements one can make himself, what would they be? T. H.

A — Each house is unique, so what may be best for one house may not be best for another. In general, setting your thermostat lower in the winter and higher in the summer is at or near the very top of the no-cost list.

Switching off lights when you leave a room saves a lot of money too. In addition to saving the electricity for the lights, your air conditioning load will be less in the summer.

Installing a low-flow shower head or flow restrictor can save more than $100 dollars per year. You can buy a flow restrictor for about a buck.

ARMS CONTROL

Making the choice between an adjustable-rate mortgage (ARM) and a fixed-rate mortgage is a risk/benefit decision based on the circumstances and outlook of each individual. In general, the borrower assumes the risk that interest rates will rise in exchange for a lower initial interest rate on his ARM. Such mitigating factors as the borrowers' plans to move within three years must be considered before deciding on an ARM. For those who decided on an ARM over the traditional 30-year fixed-rate mortgage four years ago, the choice has been a good one. The homeowner who took out a $100,000, 30-year ARM tied to the one year T-bill in early 1985 has saved over $13,000 in interest when compared to the interest paid on a 30-year fixed-rate mortgage. Of course, the past is no indicator of the future, but the numbers show that the ARM has its place.

Japanese corporate ethic still demands utmost in employee obedience, loyalty

By MARGARET SHAPIRO
The Washington Post

TOKYO — The ceremonial room of Nippon Steel's headquarters was eerily silent as the president of the company strode to the lectern and gazed down upon his 484 newest recruits, most of them just graduated from Japanese universities or high schools.

For an hour, these young inductees into the world of Japanese business had rehearsed for this moment. Now, with military precision they jumped to the commands barked at them by a company personnel officer — "Stand! Bow! Sit!" — then stiffly listened as their new boss exhorted them to work hard, pay attention to their superiors, put their student ways behind them and become good company men.

"Your life must be changed," said company president Hiroshi Saito. While he encouraged the recruits to maintain youthful enthusiasm and individuality, he warned, "The company cannot treat you like children. You have to manage and control your health and do your work."

This scene at Nippon Steel was repeated across Japan in early April as 1.1 million young graduates were beginning the process of being molded into loyal, hard-working and disciplined company employees. This is joining the company Japanese-style.

Japanese and outsiders alike have been predicting the demise of this country's lifetime employment system and its postwar ethic of sacrifice for the company that has made Japan an economic giant. But the old values were very much on view recently as new recruits were welcomed into the fold.

New employees at Nippon Steel in Tokyo bow on command to the company president

Both the company executives and the young people, for whom joining the firm is in some ways a central moment of life, seemed equally committed to the bowing lessons, solidarity training and instruction in company ways.

"As working, wage-earning men, we are quite immature. But with help from superiors and older colleagues, and (my) youth and energy ... I am determined to forge ahead with the company," said Tatsuhiko Sakai, one of the new Nippon Steel employees. Every April, when recent college and high school graduates begin work en masse, Japanese companies, with their curious mix of paternalistic and authoritarian ways, rely on a variety of methods for training their new employees to be good company members.

Nippon Steel and many other large businesses house new workers in dormitories, where they eat, sleep and socialize with the people who will likely be their colleagues for the next 30 years. In the process they learn the highly prized Japanese skill of group decision-making and collective advancement.

Other companies, including computer makers and major banks, send their new employees to Zen Buddhist retreats. For several days they do little more than meditate and write Buddhist sutras in a group. Many recruits later describe the ritual as exhausting but one that made them feel closer to their colleagues and more respectful of their company superiors.

Mitsubishi Trust and Banking Co. hands its new employees a brief list of "do's and don'ts" to get them started on the right foot. It warns them to respond with a quick "yes" when a superior calls them and to stand up immediately to receive instructions; never to scratch their head or cross their legs or arms in front of customers or superiors; never to smoke while talking with a superior and never to criticize the company or its management.

Executives at tiny Columbus Co. Ltd., a maker of shoe polish, have come up with a unique induction ritual. First, top officers of the company polish the shoes of young recruits, and then the new employees reciprocate. "It is the best way to foster their love for our company and to communicate with each other," a managing director of the firm told the Japanese magazine Focus.

Many firms this year began sending new employees an easy-to-read comic book on life as a shakaijin — a Japanese word that literally translates as "society person" but really means "company employee and wage earner." The book was written by the Japan Management Association, which develops training programs for new employees.

The comic book instructs new employees on how to get to work on time — "For the company person, it's a heavy crime to be late" — how to work on a densely packed commuter train, how to eliminate student mannerisms and words, and how to dress and bow properly. A new employee is expected to bow to anyone encountered, with a 15-degree bow to colleagues and a 45-degree bow for top executives. It warns new recruits that companies expect most workers to put in regular overtime, but "it can be very interesting."

This comic book, and a companion video tape, were put together after business leaders began complaining that recent crops of new employees were unprepared for the hard work, discipline and polite behavior required by companies.

As is often the case in Japan, the concerns appear to exaggerate the problem. The younger generation shows few signs of rebellion against the system, its long hours and disciplined work regimen. Many business executives say that new recruits have somewhat different values than middle-aged employees — "they want more leisure time, for instance. But once in the company, they quickly adapt.

Akihiro Saito, 22, a recent graduate of a leading university, just joined Nippon Steel. "There are things that I don't like. But if you go to the village, you must obey its customs," he said, quoting a Japanese proverb.

Still, many companies, including Nippon Steel, have begun to take the needs of these young recruits somewhat into account, telling them to work hard but also to enjoy life.

At Nippon Steel, the induction process for the 1989 entrants began on a Monday when they nervously gathered at the headquarters for their quite formal and serious induction ceremony. It is partly intended to "draw a line for them between student and company life," said Hideo Hamadu, a manager in the company's personnel division.

Once hired onto a particular career track, employees rarely move off it, so on starting day, most of the recruits had a good idea of what the next 30 years would hold for them as one of Nippon Steel's 59,000 workers.

On the first few nights, the company-assigned "big brothers" in meet with the recruits and let them know what life is really like inside Nippon Steel. They then were instructed to come up with a group drawing of the Nippon Steel of the future. The assignment was designed to help them learn the patience and perseverence needed for collective decision-making.

Hamada said, "It is very important to develop unity among the group that entered the company together."

"Your life must be changed. The company cannot treat you like children. You have to manage and control your health and do your work.'

— Hiroshi Saito, Nippon Steel president

Car color reveals your personality

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. The color you choose for your car may reveal a bit avout your personality, the Automotive Information Council says.

Striking colors, like bright red or yellow, indicate that you are bold and daring, while sky tones such as blue, green or gold are the sign of a practical, down-to-earth person.

Colors commonly found on luxury cars -white, silver and gray -are signs of pride and good taste. Drivers who consider themselves classy often choose cars like black or dark blue.

Unusual colors such as pink, orange or purple are signs of individuality, but a car with any of those colors won't sell easily when you're ready to sell it and buy a new one, AIC warns.

Check dishwasher for potential fire hazard – free service now available

Do you have a Whirlpool under-counter dishwasher installed in your kitchen? If so, check it immediately. Open the door and compare this list of model numbers to those on the model and serial plate located along the right front edge of the tub: DU7400XS-O; DU7600XS-O; DU7800XS-O; DU9000XR-O; and DU9000XR-1.

If you find one of those model numbers on the plate, and if it has the original selector switch, stop using the dishwasher and call 1/800/541-5746 toll free to arrange for free service needed to modify the unit to prevent a fire. A pushbutton selector switch on these models can, under some conditions, catch fire.

On August 2, 1988, in cooperation with the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission, Whirlpool announced a modification program for approximately 75,000 dishwashers of the five models listed. The modification involves replacing the selector switch on each unit.

Although Whirlpool field sales and service personnel are continuing with attempts to contact all owners of the affected dishwasher models, those who have not yet been notified should call the above toll-free number for immediate free service. In the meantime, don't use the dishwasher. In fact, to be on the safe side, the company recommends leaving the door ajar, in the unlatched position.

Suzuki agrees to new safety warnings on Samurai vehicles

By Newsday

American Suzuki Motor Corp. said Thursday that it has settled a dispute with the attorneys general of seven states by agreeing to put safety warnings in all advertising and promotional material for its four-wheel-drive Suzuki Samurai vehicle.

The messages are to warn consumers to avoid sharp turns and abrupt maneuvers that can cause "sport utility vehicles" to roll over. They are also to advise riders to always wear seat belts.

Consumer advocates, who failed in attempts to persuade a safety agency to investigate the Samurai, said the agreement with the states does not go far enough.

"No warning can make the Samurai safe for consumers," said Kristen Rand, a lawyer for Consumers Union, which petitioned the National Highway Transportation Safety Administration last fall to set standards for stability. "The Samurai will not allow you to make a maneuver such as turning sharply to avoid hitting a child who darts in front of you."

Last June, the attorneys general of California, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Missouri, New York, Texas and Washington launched an investigation into Suzuki's advertising practices after receiving reports of an unusually high rate of rollover incidents and deaths.

New York Attorney General Robert Abrams said the investigation concluded that "Suzuki had deceived the public by promoting the Samurai as a safe, fun passenger vehicle while knowing ... it can present considerable dangers to young, inexperienced first-time purchasers who were Suzuki's target buyers."

Suzuki said the agreement makes no allegations about the vehicle's safety. N Douglas Muzza, vice president and general manager of American Suzuki, the U.S. arm of the Japanese carmaker, called the agreement "a final chapter in a long story of false allegations about the Samurai."

The Consumers Union said its tests show the Samurai is prone to roll over.

Fax machines are humming away on more than business

Los Angeles Times

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — Why are all those home fax machines around here purring away late at night?

Stockbrokers passing hot tips on to blue-chip customers? Movie execs swapping script outlines into the night?

Would you believe homework?

According to fax machine providers, many of the people who own the devices and have teen-agers (who understandably wish to remain anonymous) are likely to have their machines tied up at night with school assignments being faxed back and forth.

And even those kids who do their homework unassisted are eager to use faxes to create electronic study groups — with parental approval.

"My daughter is just waiting for somebody in her class to have a parent bring a fax machine home," said Bill McCue, president of Public FAX in Orange. "They always forget stuff ... she'll call up a girlfriend and try to figure out how to do math problems. You ever try to do math over the phone?"

It's all part of the growing fax consciousness. Initially introduced as a business tool, facsimile machines — which send and receive copies of documents over telephone lines in seconds — are suddenly being employed for an expanding array of personal uses: everything from playing chess to executing practical jokes to sending holiday greetings.

The number of fax machines in the country has grown to 1.7 million, according to estimates of analysts at Dataquest, a high-tech market research and consulting firm in San Jose, Calif. Most of those machines are still in offices, where business applications are expanding rapidly and becoming far more creative.

Doctors now fax prescriptions to pharmacies. Fire department personnel fax blueprints of buildings to fire fighters at fire sites.

The machines have also enlivened the formats of radio stations eager to court those who listen at the office especially since the Arbitron ratings were recently expanded to monitor office listening habits. Numerous stations have invited audiences to communicate with deejays via office fax machines. Some, such as WMMR in Philadelphia, have even asked listeners to "fax us your body parts."

That sport showed up recently on the sitcom "Murphy Brown," when the TV reporter played by Candice Bergen explained her absence from the office Christmas party, saying, "The memory of last year's party is still fresh in my mind. Perhaps you heard about it. I drank all the punch and faxed my chest to the West Coast."

On KABC's "Ken & Bob Comedy," a high-rated, morning show in the Los Angeles area, listeners have been asked to fax in such things as stupid instructions that accompany products. The fax format became so popular the duo formed a special club for Citizens with Faxes, letting listeners via fax.

Not only do fax machines transmit drawings and photographs made in a few half-turns of the dial, they operate, Bastedo says, "on a piece of paper and paranoia," points number. What's more, prices have come down: you can now purchase a fax machine for as little as $600 to $2,500.

They're hot, convenient, easy to use and increasingly affordable. Is it any wonder that fax machines are now affecting people's lives from the cradle to the grave?

McCue observes that a Kansas Falls, Ore., public fax outlet does "a lucky business with local merchants with a need to get agreement forms signed rapidly." And on New Year's Day, one of his Public FAX employees gave birth to a baby at 1:30 p.m. After the baby's footprints were recorded, they were faxed to Carbondale, Ill., to the baby's great-grandparents, who received the prints within an hour of the birth.

Scientists to attempt Trans-Antarctic Expedition

By The Associated Press

On the untouched expanse of the Arctic icecap it seemed a mirage — preposterous, incredible: ski tracks.

Will Steger, leading the first unsupported dogsled trek to the North Pole since Adm. Robert Peary's, saw the unmistakable evidence of cross-country skis. He knew they could only be those of Jean-Louis Etienne, a Frenchman who was about to become the first man to ski alone to the pole.

It was in April 1986, in a tent on the monotonous frozen landscape, that the two adventurers sipped tea and dreamed of their next quest: a multinational trek across Antarctica. After reaching their destination, they began planning the Trans-Antarctica Expedition, which is to begin Aug. 1.

Their previous exploits were for the sheer joy of pitting man against nature. This one would do that and more: draw attention to threats against nature and to the need for international cooperation in protecting Antarctica.

Steger and Etienne enlisted scientists and explorers from the Soviet Union, China, Japan and Great Britain for a seven-month, 4,000-mile trip. Others have crossed Antarctica on snowmobiles and giant snow tractors, but this will be the first unmechanized attempt.

Victor Boyarsky of the Soviet Arctic and Antarctic Research Institute, a popular explorer and veteran of polar travel, is co-leader. The other members of the team are glaciologist Qin Dahe of China; Geoff Somers, who has spent 42 months in Antarctica with the British Antarctic Survey; and Keizo Funatsu of Japan, a former economist who turned to dog-sledding and adventure.

Somers will plot the trek's course; Funatsu is in charge of the dogs.

Steger, who in the past has picked his own teams, says he is honored that the Soviet Union and China will be sending official representatives. The four members from Western nations are not formally backed by their governments.

Steger recalled that when he asked if Boyarsky spoke English, a Soviet official replied: "In one year, he will speak English very well."

"A real interesting diplomatic challenge," Steger called it.

Other international support includes the use of China's Great Wall Station on King George Island as a staging point. New Zealanders stationed at the Scott McArdle base donated 12 dogs whose lineage can be traced to dogs owned by polar explorer Richard Byrd. The Soviet Union provided an icebreaker to transport 15 tons of food for the men and 36 dogs; the provisions were cached on the route in November. The USSR also plans to send a military cargo plane to pick up the team from its rendezvous at Steger's Minnesota camp; the U.S. State Department, while not officially sanctioning the trek, is expected to let the plane land.

After refueling in Cuba, the team will fly to the Great Wall Base, about 600 miles south of the tip of South America. The expedition, which will set out in the middle of the Austral winter, will at first follow known landmarks.

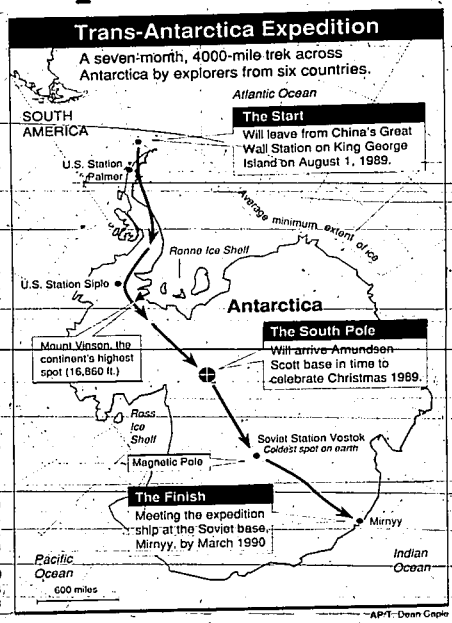

"We'll have maps for the first 1,500 miles. The last 2,500 miles there is, virtually nothing. It's flat. There's nothing to map," Steger said.

They'll cross the Ellsworth Mountains and skirt Mt. Vinson, the continent's highest spot at 16,860 feet. They'll visit three American bases — Palmer, Siple and Amundsen-Scott at the South Pole, where they plan to celebrate Christmas.

The next dot of civilization they'll aim for is the Soviet base at Vostok, near the magnetic south pole. Vostok, the coldest place on Earth, will serve as a base for a French documentary film crew that will travel with the expedition for three weeks, and for the team's pilot.

By March, the trekkers should reach the Soviet base of Mirnyy on the east coast, also known as Queen Mary Coast, ending the longest possible traverse.

They will be picked up by the expedition ship, built in France with a special aluminum hull designed to pop up and settle on top of the ice rather than be trapped and crushed.

So far, about 45 nations have signed television contracts with the expedition. ABC has bought exclusive U.S. TV rights. "We want the world to know much, much more about Antarctica after our expedition than it did before we set out," Steger said.

The continent is roughly the shape of a bottle cap. It rises sharply at the perimeter, then flattens out in a vast, high plateau at an average elevation of 9,500 feet. Antarctica's 5.4 million square miles is more than China and India combined. It has no indigenous people, and wildlife is confined to the coast.

A treaty signed in 1959 by a dozen nations, with additional signatories in subsequent years, put all territorial claims on Antarctica on hold, banned military activity and established freedom of scientific inquiry.

But many countries now have designs on the land for strategic, political and even economic reasons — some expect to find oil, coal and mineral deposits under the ice. Some want to see the continent cut into pie-shaped wedges, but Steger wants the people of the world to demand that it be protected, intact.

"It sounds like a very lofty goal, but Antarctica is a going to play a very important role in the future of the planet," he said.

Planetary warming of just a few degrees could melt the polar ice caps, raising sea level and flooding coastal areas, but Steger said it's simplistic to worry about submerged cities.

With 85 percent of the planet's fresh water stored in the snow and ice of Antarctica, a thaw would reduce the salinity of the oceans, change ocean currents and wreak havoc with weather patterns.

The other environmental nightmare awakening interest in Antarctica is the discovery of a giant hole in the ozone layer directly over the continent. Ozone screens the planet from excess ultraviolet radiation.

Scientists predict continued ozone depletion will increase skin cancer, but such thinking is "myopic," Steger said. Most significantly, increased solar radiation could disrupt the reproduction cycles of plankton, the microscopic oceanic plants and animals that are the basis of the global food chain.

These ominous changes are most apparent in Antarctica, making it "like a canary in a mine," Steger said.

The team will be under the ozone hole for about 40 days and 500 miles as they cross a 13,000-foot high plateau known as the Area of Inaccessibility. It's the worst possible place on earth for ultraviolet exposure.

The team will carry a monitor and Boyarsky will record ozone levels at regular intervals, the first cross-section of ozone across the continent.

Qin will take snow and ice samples all the way across Antarctica, recording temperatures and oxygen content for a geological history of the icecap.

Etienne, a physician, will monitor cholesterol levels of the team members, who will rely on the high-fat diet typical of cultures in cold regions.

But the experiments that can be done along the way are limited by time and weight. The trekkers plan to travel 30 miles a day on cross-country skis, and the three dogsleds can carry no more than 900 pounds of gear.

Steger admits they won't attempt "pure science" but he hopes the findings will contribute to the knowledge of this frontier. "We need international cooperation. Solutions to environmental problems must be global."

Unique treaty keeps coldest place on earth neutral, undivided

By The Associated Press

The only piece of the planet that has never been divided or conquered is Antarctica, a vast wilderness kept neutral by a unique treaty.

It has no boundaries other than its own ragged coastline.

The Antarctic Treaty grew out of the 1957-58 International Geophysical Year "as an agreement to demilitarize, denuclearize and basically depoliticize the continent," said Ray Arnaudo of the State Department Office of Oceans and Polar Affairs.

Of the 12 original signers, seven nations had territorial claims on parts of Antarctica. "The treaty solved that problem by putting the claims on ice, so to speak," Arnaudo said. "It's an agreement to disagree."

The treaty, which came into force in 1961, reserves Antarctica for peaceful purposes and guarantees freedom of research below latitude 60 degrees south. It was written so that it could not be changed for 30 years and thereafter remains in force unless a signer calls for a conference to review a particular item.

The earliest a signer could call for renegotiation is 1991, but so far, no nation was indicated a desire to do so, Arnaudo said. "We are quite happy with the treaty. It's not perfect, but it works.

"Cynics could say it's successful because there's nothing to fight about but ice. But I think anyplace where there is interaction between countries, and the action is peaceful, it deserves note."

There have been no military exercises, no nuclear weapons and no conventional weapons on Antarctica for 30 years. The treaty also prohibits nations from using the continent as a dump for radioactive wastes.

The original signers — the United States, Soviet Union, Japan, South Africa, Belgium, Argentina, Australia, Chile, France, New Zealand, Norway and Great Britain, the last six with territorial claims — have been joined by 27 other nations. The 39 nations represent two-thirds of the world population.

To deal with new issues, the treaty also calls for meetings every other year. Participants include the dozen original signers and 10 other signatory nations that conduct substantial scientific research in Antarctica. The other 17 nations attend as observers.

"During the Falklands War the British and the Argentines sat at the same table and agreed not to talk about the Maldive Islands. Similarly, both North and South Korea are signers," Arnaudo said.

At the 14 meetings since 1961, a number of measures have been adopted to facilitate scientific research and protect the Antarctic environment.

Talks are under way regarding mineral resources.

All parties to the treaty have agreed to refrain from mining until an agreement is reached.

"It's a remarkable place," Arnaudo said. "It's a place where people really do cooperate."

Some cold facts on Antarctica

Here are some facts about Antarctica, the coldest place on Earth:

•Antarctica is so remote that the great explorers missed it altogether during the Age of Discovery. Neither the Russian Thaddeus von Bellinhausen, who discovered two coastal islands in 1819-20, nor American Nathaniel Palmer, who discovered what is now called Palmer Peninsula in 1820, realized they were on the verge of a new continent. In 1840, American Charles Wilkes sailed along 1,500 miles of coast and realized that he had found the seventh continent.

•In 1911, Norwegian Roald Amundsen was the first to reach the South Pole. Eighteen years later, aviator Richard Byrd was the first fly over it. British scientists led by Sir Vivian Ernest Fuchs made the first land traverse of the continent in 1957-58 in huge snow tractors.

•Six thousand meteorites have been discovered on Antarctica, more than those discovered in all the rest of the world.

•The continent's human population averages 2,000 in the summer, dwindling to about 800 in the winter. Only one other warm-blooded animal remains during the winter, the emperor penguin. The female emperor penguin lays one egg and returns to the warm sea for the winter. The male

An Indian weaver in Varanasi makes a silk sari on a hand loom

The Washington Post

VARANASI, India — The loom's steady click filled the room as the weaver's deft hands pushed a shuttle between threads hanging from a machine that looked to be from medieval times.

Connected to the stick was a fine thread, almost invisible. With a flick of his wrist and a push of the foot pedal, the weaver added it to hundreds of other threads as he practiced one of the world's great arts creating the finely woven silks of Varanasi, known as Benares silks for the city's preindependence name.

A Benares silk sari is to the Indian bride what the finest crystal or china is to young Americans. It is a symbol of luxury and a thing of beauty, with glittering colors interlaced with delicately woven flowers or geometric patterns in silver or gold. In fashion-conscious New Delhi or Bombay, its shimmering folds catch even the most jaded eye.

As with other works of art, Benares silks are expensive. In a country where the average annual income is still about $200, the cost of even the simplest Benares hand-woven sari is $100 to $135, and fine ones can cost $260 to $325, a month's salary for a well-established middle-class Indian and much more than that for the average family.

The average weaver, however, will earn only $2.50 or $3.50 a day for his labors.

Far from New Delhi's fine hotels and diplomatic receptions, thousands of Varanasi men sit at their old looms, their fingers moving swiftly between the wefts as their wives prepare silk threads and their sons watch and learn. The men, in dark, cramped rooms — sweating in summer, freezing in winter — do what their fathers and grandfathers and great-grandfathers did before them: craft fine silks that adorn the rich and famous of India.

Four hundred years ago, powerful Mogul princes wore jackets woven of silk and gold by weavers here, while ladies in royal harems wrapped themselves in delicate diaphanous brocades. And for centuries before the Moguls, wives of wealthy Hindumerchants provided a ready market for Benares silks.

The financial demands and pressures of modern life have virtually destroyed traditional crafts in many countries, and even in tradition-bound India, many of the old crafts have only a few practitioners. Even for the silk weavers in Varanasi, much has changed.

In the old days, a master craftsman was designer and creator, carrying in his head the tens of thousands of steps necessary to weave a single piece.

Today, for most of the craftsmen, predesigned punch cards hooked to the top of the loom create the design, while the weaver brings only his weaving skills to the creation. The cards save time and allow specialization, but also limit weaving techniques and designs.

Jaafar Ali is a holdover from the old school, a man who sketches a fine design and then painstakingly weaves a small version to guide the weavers who will make the six-yard-long sari.

"I learned from my grandfather and he learned from those before," he said, as his two teen-aged grandsons, Nasir Ahmad and Mohammed Arif, watched him work. The boys started with him when they were 12 or 13, and in four or five years will have learned enough to work on their own.

The weaving community is a close one and most of its members view modern concepts of schooling as unnecessary. Instead, as ancient guilds once did, the weavers teach their own. "We are weavers. We like to teach our children our craft. That is why they don't go to school. If they went to school, how could they have time to learn the craft?" Ali asked.

Ali, like most weavers here, is Moslem, a seeming anomaly in Varanasi, considered by Hindus to be their holiest city. But it is logical when viewed against the backdrop of Indian history.

When the Moguls swept across India, they brought Islam with them. "The Mogul princes were the patrons, the people who bought the finely woven silks and brocades, so the weavers naturally became Moslems as well," said B. Chakravarty, a department head at the nearby government-run weavers center.

While some Varanasi weavers are now using more modern methods, efforts are being made at the weavers' center and other institutes to revive some ancient techniques all but lost.

Traditions are being relearned in part because affluent Indians want to purchase items made by such methods, and the popular Festival of India that has traveled internationally to celebrate Indian culture has sparked interest in Indian silks in other countries as well.

Bharat Lal, assistant director at the weavers' center, watched as Sunil Das patiently wove delicate gold threads against a white background in an ancient, intricate technique known as (ital) dacca jamadani (end ital).

"It will take him a year to complete it. This is the way it was done thousands of years ago and we are reviving it here. We went first to the museums to see old pieces and then found old time weavers who remembered some of the techniques," Lal said.

When Das is done, his silk will bring $2,000 — a sum a modern-day prince will be happy to pay.

Study raises questions about doctors, health services

Los Angeles Times

A new federal study released Friday raises "troubling" questions about the growing tendency among physicians to own a wide range of health care services to which they refer their patients for treatments.

U.S. Health and Human Services Inspector General Richard P. Kusserow released a report to Congress suggesting six different ways of curbing these arrangements, which he said pose potential conflicts of interest for physicians and raise the nation's health care costs by millions of dollars a year.

In his report, Kusserow made a "conservative estimate" that 25 percent of the clinical laboratories nationwide are owned by referring physicians. Among physiological laboratories providing services such as physical therapy, 27 percent are physician-owned, the report said.

Kusserow warned of "a proliferation" of business deals among physicians that may violate existing anti-kickback statutes and said he is asking the public in each state to report suspected criminality to a special "hot line."

"Because physician investors can benefit financially from their referrals, unnecessary procedures and tests may be ordered or performed, resulting in unnecessary expenditures," Kusserow warned.

Critics such as Rep. Pete Stark, D-Calif., say there are many questionable business arrangements among physicians that have slipped through "loopholes" in the existing anti-kickback laws. He has proposed to close them in his new bill called the "Ethics in Patient Referrals Act."

Stark's bill has gathered support from many consumer groups but not from the American Medical Association. AMA official Dr. James Todd said in an interview that there has been "no adequate proof that we need the blanket legislation Stark is talking about."

AMA officials have asserted that physician investment in laboratories and other health care services is likely to ensure top quality service and care. In some cases, they say that a clinic could not have been financed or built but for local doctors who were willing to make an often-risky investment.

Until now, there was no formal tally of the number of physicians who refer patients to clinics they own.

In Kusserow's survey of 2,690 physicians who treat Medicare patients in eight states, about 12 percent said they have ownership or investment interests in heath care facilities where they refer their patients for care. Another 8 percent have compensation arrangements of some other kind with the facility, such as consulting agreements, management services contracts and leases for office space.

The report says that Medicare patients treated at clinical labs owned by their doctors receive almost half again as many tests as Medicare patients in general.

This "over-utilization" of services cost the Medicare program an additional $28 million in 1987, Kusserow said.

The report stopped short of calling the additional tests medically unnecessary.

But Kusserow said that the fact that these patients "tend to use significantly more services is ... quite troubling."

The report found that physicians have invested in a wide range of health care businesses ranging from laboratories to durable medical equipment suppliers, home health agencies, hospitals, nursing homes, ambulatory surgical centers and health maintenance organizations.

"I am concerned about the increasing prevalence of this," said Dr. Arnold Relman, editor of the prestigious New England Journal of Medicine and a supporter of the Stark legislation. "The crucial point is not whether it involves 40,000, 50,000 or 100,000 doctors, but that it's unethical and it's wrong and it's not in the public interest" for doctors to refer patients to medical services that they own.

Federal anti-kickback laws passed by Congress in 1977 provide criminal penalties for anyone, including doctors, who solicits, receives, offers or pays anything of value in return for the referral of a health care service that is reimbursable under the federal Medicare or Medicaid program.

But Kusserow said that "a number of obstacles" impede enforcement of the law and the cases have often been assigned a low priority at the Department of Justice.

Kusserow outlined six different ways to curb abuses — with the Stark legislation being the most drastic.

Todd said the AMA would support the other five alternatives, but Stark dismissed them as ineffective and "conducive to more loopholes."

Activists claim Japan imports S. African goods through 3rd countries

TOKYO (AP) Japanese companies are using third countries as channels to reduce direct imports from South Africa and avert criticism that Japan's trade supports the apartheid system, trade experts and anti-apartheid activists say.

"Japanese imports from South Africa fell only because it (Japan) imported South African gold and platinum indirectly through third countries such as Switzerland, Britain and France," said Jerry Matsila, a Tokyo representative of the African National Congress, a group seeking to overthrow the Pretoria government.

Foreign Ministry officials have emphasized the government opposes the apartheid system of racial segregation but said there was no legal way to prevent companies from using third countries as conduits for South African products.

In 1987, Japan was Pretoria's No. 1 trading partner, surpassing the United States and West Germany. As a result the Japanese came under heavy criticism for giving economic support to apartheid.

In June last year, Japan was singled out in a United Nations resolution criticizing its increased trade with South Africa.

The government in early 1988 asked trading companies to practice self-restraint in trade with South Africa, and then was pleased when trade figures announced in January showed Japan was no longer South Africa's biggest trading partner, having fallen behind West Germany.

Japan's two-way trade with South Africa in 1988 declined 3.5 percent from 1987 to $3.98 billion.

But detailed official statistics show the drop in overall trade was largely due to a drastic decline in imports of precious metals from South Africa.

Although exports to South Africa grew 9.8 percent in 1988 from the previous year, imports from South Africa fell 14.5 percent, due to a 40.7 percent decline in the dollar value of platinum imports and an 84.3 percent drop in the dollar value of gold imports.

Critics and scholars closely following the controversy say that Japan only shifted its source of platinum and gold from South Africa to third countries, many of which import these precious metals from South Africa.

Customs clearance statistics show Japan's imports of gold and platinum from Britain, Switzerland, France, West Germany and the United States jumped dramatically.

By weight, gold imports from Britain in 1988 jumped 80.9 percent from the previous year while gold from Switzerland increased by 19.8 percent.

Platinum imports from Britain more than doubled, those from West Germany were up more than 700 percent, and those from France were 27 times higher than the previous year.

"It is common knowledge that neither Britain nor Switzerland produces gold or platinum," said Yoko Kitazawa, an author who has also researched Japanese uranium purchases from southern Africa. "It is obvious that Japan is changing labels of South African gold and platinum to those of Britain and Switzerland when those precious metals go to exchanges in Zurich and London, and registering them as British and Swiss gold and platinum."

Foreign Ministry officials said Japanese companies may have used third countries to produce lower figures for imports from South Africa. But "you can't really prove" how much of the imports from third countries are South African products, said Yasufumi Kotake, who works on one of the ministry's Africa desks.

"I am not sure if we can single out Japanese companies and blame them for switching the sources of imports," he said. "Legally, there is not really any way to prevent Japanese companies from importing South African products from third countries."

Kotake stressed that "Japan is doing what she can do. And we need cooperation from other European countries and the United States to make it a concerted effort."

But Matsila, the African National Congress representative, charged that "what Japan is doing is hiding the origin of its imports. What it eventually got out of South Africa in 1988 was considerably more than that of 1987 if you include those indirectly imported products."

Government statistics show Japan's two-way trade with South Africa in 1988, excluding gold and platinum, actually increased 8.1 percent from the previous year.

Most Japanese firms involved in gold and platinum trading declined to comment. But one official of Tanaka Precious Metal Co., Japan's largest platinum supplier, said, "We have been only using non-South African platinum such as from the Soviet Union for years. We are not prepared to discuss the matter right now."

• The Soviet base at Vostok recorded the world's lowest temperature — minus 129.3 degrees Fahrenheit — in July 1983.

• During storms, Antarctic winds reach 200 mph. When it's summer in the northern hemisphere, the temperature in Antarctica averages minus 45 degrees. In austral summer, it warms up to just below freezing.

• All but 2 percent of the continent is covered by ice, which is three miles thick in places. This icepack holds about 90 percent of the world's fresh water and if it melted, scientists predict it would raise the level of the world's oceans by 160 to 200 feet.

• Despite all the ice, the continent receives less than two inches of precipitation a year. Boreholes in the Antarctic ice yield samples that date back 200,000 years. The continent also contains a desert, known as the Dry Valleys, that is the driest place on earth.

Swiss government to support rail link

BERN, Switzerland (AP) — The government announced Wednesday its support for a $4.5 billion rail link to handle an anticipated increase in commercial trans-Alpine traffic in the next 20 years.

The plans call for a new 31-mile tunnel through the Gotthard Massif in central Switzerland, which would run below the 107-year-old, 9.3-mile link. The tunnel, estimated to be completed by the year 2005, would match the length of the channel tunnel between Britain and France planned for 1993.

The old Gotthard tunnel handles more than four-fifths of the rail freight passing through Switzerland but won't be able to cope with an increase in traffic expected after the unified European Economic Community market after 1992.

The project also envisions a new 17.6-mile tunnel through Mount Loetschberg connecting the Bern region with western Switzerland and Italy. That link could be finished by 1997.

Parliament is expected to take up the project next winter. If 100,000 people sign petitions against the plan, it would be put to a nationwide vote.

Mexico to release 1,000 prisoners

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The government, which has announced plans to release more than 400 political prisoners, is preparing to free nearly 1,000 others, news reports said.

News agencies said Tuesday the Interior Ministry's human rights department has drawn up a list of another 989 prisoners. It did not say when the inmates would be released.

The government news agency Notimex quoted an unidentified human rights official as saying the new cases were being studied to see how they qualify for amnesty. The list will be released this week and the number of prisoners could be increased, Notimex said.

President Carlos Salinas de Gortari first announced in February the release of 403 political prisoners.

Paris mayor unveils new monument

PARIS (AP) — Mayor Jacques Chirac on Wednesday unveiled the city's newest monument — a golden Flame of Liberty that he said symbolized enduring French-American friendship.

The flame, made of hammered brass covered with 5,000 gold leaves, is a duplicate of the one that shines over New York harbor on the Statue of Liberty.

The monument stands at the Place de l'Alma in the city's fashionable 16th district with the Eiffel Tower across the Seine River serving as a backdrop.

"This is an important event in the old, fraternal ties between France and the United States," Chirac said at the unveiling ceremony. "The monument is a symbol of two qualities, liberty and international friendship."

U.N. group delays PLO decision

GENEVA (AP) — The annual assembly of the World Health Organization Wednesday put off for 48 hours a decision on the PLO's controversial bid to be admitted as a state member of the 166-nation U.N. body.

Failure by the Arab countries to obtain an immediate vote boosted hopes of those favoring a compromise to head off a showdown with the United States.

Washington has threatened to stop all financial support to any U.N. agency that grants full membership to the Palestine Liberation Organization, which now is a non-voting observer in the United Nations.

The United States made that threat even though it reversed a longstanding policy earlier this year and opened talks with the PLO after it's chairman, Yasser Arafat, recognized Israel's right to exist.

On Friday, the WHO annual assembly will vote on two rival draft resolutions:

One, co-sponsored by all 21 Arab countries, would "admit the State of Palestine" as a member of the 166-nation organization.

S. Africa minister Botha to step down

Los Angeles Times

JOHANNESBURG, South Arica — Interior Minister Stoffel Botha, the man behind South Africa's controversial press-censorship laws, said Wednesday he would step down later this year.

Botha, 60, who heads the ruling National Party in the eastern province of Natal, will end his 15-year career in politics and retire after elections planned for Sept. 6.

Since emergency-rule legislation was introduced in June 1986, Botha has used his powers to suspend publication of a number of opposition newspapers for several months at a time.

At least seven foreign television journalists have been expelled since the tighter press laws were introduced.

Rafsanjani says attack call misinterpreted

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iranian Parliament Speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani sought Wednesday to distance himself from an inflammatory call for Palestinians to kill Americans and other Westerners, saying his remarks were misinterpreted.

In an interview on Tehran Radio, Rafsanjani said he was "only analyzing" the Middle East situation, and did not "mean to condone the killing of innocent civilians."

In his prayer sermon at Tehran University on Friday, Rafsanjani called on Palestinians to kill Westerners, hijack planes and bomb Western interests.

"Of course, maybe my tone was such that it was taken to mean that I was recommending such action. Maybe my tone was such, but I meant it as an interpretation," Rafsanjani said in an interview with Tehran Radio, monitored in Nicosia.

In Friday's sermon, Rafsanjani had urged Palestinians to "declare open war on American targets."

He had said: "If for every Palestinian martyred in Palestine, they kill five Americans, Britons or Frenchmen outside, the Zionists would not dare continue these wrongs."

"Why don't you hijack planes to swap prisoners in Israeli hands, or blow up prisoners?" advised Rafsanjani, who so far is Iran's only presidential candidate for summer elections.

His sermon was seen as an attempt to distance himself from a clique that sought to build bridges with the West until recent weeks, when the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini moved decisively to strengthen the hand of hard-liners.

Rafsanjani's remarks triggered strong criticism in a West already incensed by Khomeini's religious edict calling on Moslems to kill British writer Salman Rushdie for his book, "The Satanic Verses." Many Moslems say the book blasphemes Islam.

The United States, France and Britain accused Tehran of inciting murder through Rafsanjani's sermon.

Rafsanjani told Tehran radio he found the U.S., British and French reaction "very interesting."

He said the West was looking for a new issue "to make up for their defeat in the Salman Rushdie affair." He claimed an anti-Islamic campaign after Khomeini's edict was foiled by the support of Moslems all over the world.

Britain and its 11 European Community partners withdrew their ambassadors from Tehran after Khomeini's Feb.15 declaration. Some since have returned.

Rafsanjani told the radio Wednesday: "The statements I made were my own opinion. I presented an individual opinion which wasn't new ... Other officials may or may not agree with my opinions."

Rafsanjani said the Israeli crackdown on Palestinians in the occupied territories "is the worst kind of terrorism."

He told Tehran Radio he believed "their actions will lead to the killing of Westerners" whose governments, he said, back Israel.

S. Korean official will resign if he handled state affairs poorly

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Prime Minister Kang Young-hoon said Wednesday he is willing to bow to opposition demands to resign if he is held responsible for mishandling state affairs such as the wave of political violence.

But the leader of President Roh Tae-woo's 22-member Cabinet reiterated his government's determination to crush leftist radical groups.

"The government will not sit idle when campuses are becoming firebomb-manufacturing factories. Neither will we allow them to become the bases of violence," Kang told the National Assembly.

"Also, I am willing to resign if held responsible for any state affairs that have been mishandled," he said.

Opposition members used the session to launch an offensive against Roh's government, demanding Kang and all Cabinet ministers resign for failing to provide effective leadership.

Dissenting legislators charged the government is blocking democratic reform and using a crackdown on violent protests to suppress all its opponents. They accused the government of provoking unrest.

The opposition-controlled assembly can pass a resolution calling on the Cabinet to resign, but the administration is not obliged by law to honor such a motion. Opposition legislators did not call for Roh's resignation.

Answering their charges, Kang said dissidents are seeking a violent, leftist revolution that the government is determined to block.

"Leftist forces trying to overthrow our parliamentary democracy and free democratic system will face stern punishment," he said.

Since it won power in February 1988, the Roh government has allowed considerable dissident activity, but it tightened control on radical groups after dissident leader Rev. Moon Ik-hwan made an illegal visit to communist North Korea last month.

Officials here charge Moon's trip is part of a North Korean plot to expand contacts with dissidents in South Korea and undermine the Seoul government. The two nations have been bitter rivals since 1945.

The government stepped up its crackdown after six riot policemen were killed in a May 3 clash with radical students in southern Pusan city.

Roh warned he would invoke emergency powers to end violent protests.

Jalalabad quiet after weeks of shelling

EDITOR'S NOTE — The government flew Western reporters to Jalalabad for their first visit to the city since a guerrilla siege began March 7. Here is a report.

By SHARON HERBAUGH
The Associated Press

JALALABAD, Afghanistan — The army says it has driven guerrillas away from Jalalabad, ending a nine-week siege, and on Wednesday the shelling had stopped in the 16th century city of gardens built by the Moguls.

Children played in open spaces bright with lilacs.

Afghan soldiers advanced up to 25 miles along two fronts in an offensive begun Sunday against Moslem insurgents surrounding the city, their commanders said.

"As you can see, Jalalabad is alive," said Lt. Gen. Manok Mangall, chairman of the defense council and governor of Nangarhar province.

Leaders of the mujahedeen, the "holy warriors" who have fought for more than a decade, denied army claims of ending the siege, retaking the Samarkhel garrison and controlling half the road to the Pakistan border town of Torkham.

Mohammad Nabi Mohammadi, defense minister of the guerrillas' exile government, told reporters in Pakistan: "It's a total lie ... baseless propaganda. The siege of Jalalabad continues. Samarkhel continues to be in the hands of mujahedeen, who also control the Jalalabad-Torkham road."

President Najib's government flew 13 Western journalists to Jalalabad to prove it controls the strategic provincial capital 75 miles east of Kabul. Jalalabad, once known for magnificent gardens, orchards and palaces, has been under guerrilla siege since March 7. Military officials said the city, 45 miles from Pakistan, had been pounded by 131,000 rockets and artillery and mortar shells.

It lies near the Khyber Pass astride the trade routes to India and Pakistan, dominating the entrances to the Laghman and Kunar valleys.

Army officials said at least 523 civilians had been killed and 3,000 wounded during the siege. They said most of the casualties occurred in the first weeks of the first major guerrilla offensive since Soviet military forces completed their withdrawal from Afghanistan on Feb. 15.

Chinese get on bicycles, march for press freedom

BEIJING (AP) — Thousands of college students who have trudged miles to protest for democracy got on their bicycles Wednesday and pedaled to the offices of state-run media to call for press freedom.

"The People's Daily cheats the people! The Beijing Daily talks nonsense!" students chanted in their first march-on-wheels in nearly a month of campaigning for political reforms. Many of the 5,000 students wore colorful paper sashes and headbands supporting their cause.

Students in the provincial capital of Taiyuan joined in the democracy movement for the first time Wednesday when thousands held sit-ins in front of a hotel and Shanxi provincial government offices.

The official Xinhua News Agency described the Taiyuan demonstration as "massive" but gave no exact figure for participants. A reporter at the Shanxi Daily, contacted by telephone, said 4,000 to 5,000 students took part and demanded a dialogue on corruption with the governor.

The reporter said the protest was peaceful. It was not clear if the governor responded.

Thousands of students in more than a dozen other cities also have held sporadic protests for political reform since Beijing students began the movement April 15.

But Beijing students have protested in the greatest numbers to press their demands for a dialogue with national leaders to reform China's tightly controlled political system.

The bicycle protest was much smaller than other recent protests in the capital, but participants said they were keeping up pressure on the government. At least 16 schools took part.

Communist Party General Secretary Zhao Ziyang, who has made several conciliatory statements on the student movement, on Wednesday stressed the need for political reform but mentioned no specific changes.

Zhao was a key sponsor of political reform plans in 1987 that called for increasing popular access to officials and reducing direct party involvement in day-to-day government operations. But political reforms have been put on hold in the past year as leaders have emphasized re-establishing controls over a chaotic economy.

"Many difficulties that have cropped up in the course of the reform of the economic setup cannot possibly be overcome without a reform of the political setup," Xinhua quoted Zhao as telling a visiting Bulgarian delegation.

The student protesters have put forward no comprehensive political program, but say they want the rights listed in the Chinese constitution — freedom of speech, assembly and publication.

Strict party censorship of the media has been a target of their protests.

The student bicyclists painted slogans on their T-shirts, jackets, hats and headbands calling for a free press and accurate reporting on their own protests. They also expressed support for more than 1,000 journalists who signed a petition given to the government Tuesday calling for a dialogue on censorship.

The bicyclists stopped traffic for miles as they swarmed from campuses in northern Beijing to hold protests at the national TV network, Xinhua and the People's Daily, the party newspaper.

No officials came out to speak with them.

Gunmen kill 2 at picket line in Philippines

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Gunmen broke up a picket line at a strikebound butchery Wednesday, killing two workers and injuring 10 others, police said.

Investigator Resty de Leon said unidentified men allegedly hired by management opened fire as workers blocked a gate at the slaughterhouse in Quezon City and prevented 20 slaughtered pigs from being taken out by non-striking workers.

Owners of the slaughterhouse denied the allegations.

De Leon said two strikers died of gunshot wounds and that most of the other injured were beaten up.

The workers were in the third day of a strike over wages, he said.

Japan searches for new leader

TOKYO (AP) — The secretary-general of the governing party met Wednesday with former Foreign Minister Masayoshi Ito to try to persuade him to take the post of prime minister, but Ito refused.

Ito said after the meeting he remains determined not to accept the offer.

Shintaro Abe, the Liberal Democratic Party's secretary-general, told Ito the party unanimously supports him to succeed Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita, Kyodo News Service and the Japan Broadcasting Corp. reported.

Takeshita announced April 25 that he would step down to assume responsibility for a scandal involving the Recruit Co., an information and publishing conglomerate accused of trying to buy influence in the government by selling bargain-priced unlisted stock in a subsidiary.

Ito is one of the few senior Liberal Democratic Party members not linked to Recruit.

Three Cabinet members have resigned over their links to the scandal.

The news reports said Takeshita agreed to talk with Ito on Thursday, and the report quoted him as saying, "Political reform is the urgent need of the party, and we need to promote that under Mr. Ito's leadership."

Israelis celebrate; bloodshed continues

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israelis filled beaches and parks to celebrate their independence day Wednesday, but bloodshed continued in the occupied lands, with Arab reports saying soldiers killed one Palestinian and wounded 10.

Confrontations between stone-throwing youths and Israeli soldiers took place despite army curfews that confined more than half the 1.7 million Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip to their homes.

Curfews and blocking of roads from the territories for a third day were designed to keep Palestinians from entering Israel during Memorial Day on Tuesday, when Israelis honored their war dead, and the Independence Day observance.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, who attended more than half a dozen rallies on the two days, was taken to Hadassah Hospital in Jerusalem for medical tests Wednesday, said spokesman Yossi Ahimeir.

Shamir, 73, struck his head in a fall at his home Tuesday night and later complained of discomfort, Ahimeir said.

YITZHAK SHAMIR
Hospitalized after hitting head

"He felt weakness a little bit, and his doctors decided he should be hospitalized for checks," he said. "There appears to be nothing serious."

Shamir aides said they expected him to be released by Friday. Hospital spokeswoman Ruth Mekel said the prime minister was resting comfortably, receiving guests and working in his room.

In Independence Day interviews recorded earlier and broadcast Wednesday on Israel radio, Shamir elaborated on his peace proposal. It calls for elections in the occupied lands for representatives to negotiate with Israel on limited Palestinian self-rule.

That "interim agreement" would be followed in two years by talks on a final settlement.

His comments in Hebrew and English appeared contradictory on whether Israel was willing to talk with Palestinians intent on an independent state.

In Hebrew, after repeating his refusal to deal with the Palestine Liberation Organization, Shamir said: "We have to talk to people who are interested in a solution ... those who don't insist on this minimum demand for a Palestinian state."

In English, when asked how Palestinians could be convinced to negotiate if Israel insisted on continued rule in the occupied lands, he said the negotiators could propose whatever they wished.

"Therefore," he added, "I can suppose that the Israeli side will propose Israeli sovereignty and the Arab side will ask for Palestinian sovereignty." Both the PLO and leading Palestinians in the occupied lands have rejected Shamir's proposal on grounds it does not regognize their national aspirations.

Jewish settlers used Independence Day to inaugurate two new colonies in the occupied West Bank.

Organizers said about 50 families will live in Ofarim, in the north, and Tzorfim, near Jerusalem. They are among eight new settlements approved for construction this year and join about 130 existing colonies, which are home to about 70,000 Jews.

Western governments, including the United States, see the settlements as an obstacle to peace.

The worst violence Wednesday was reported in Ramallah, a West Bank town where Arab reports said soldiers opened fire to disperse about 200 Palestinians who were throwing stones.

British polls indicate Labor is making comeback

LONDON (AP) — Strengthened by favorable polls, a recent electoral triumph and moves to scrap its unpopular ban-the-bomb policy, the Labor Party suddenly is buoyed after a decade in the political wilderness.

Labor has lost three successive general elections to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative Party, partly because its policies projected a party in thrall to unrealistic left-wing doctrine.

This week, the party leadership decided to dump the ideology of unilateral nuclear disarmament and adapt Labor's economic policies to the prosperous 1980s.

Opinion polls taken as Mrs. Thatcher celebrated 10 years in office this month show Labor is regaining popularity and credibility. Polls placed the two parties neck and neck.

Labor Leader Neil Kinnock is gambling he can hold onto that strength — and his oft-criticized leadership — in the two years leading to the next election.

Last week, Labor won a by-election for a Welsh parliamentary seat the Tories had held for 38 years. The government dismissed it as a routine midterm setback, but the sheer size of the 12.5-percent swing was a massive boost to Labor's spirits.

Kinnock's risky strategy focuses on a wide-ranging review of party doctrine ordered after the last electoral drubbing in 1987.

On Tuesday, Kinnock persuaded Labor's ruling National Executive to unshackle the party. It voted 17-8 for a new policy whereby a Labor-led government would scrap Britain's independent nuclear arsenal only in a negotiated arms control deal.

Kinnock, a lifelong anti-nuclear campaigner, told party leaders he no longer could publicly defend the policy.

"I am not going again to make that tactical argument for the unilateral independent abandonment of nuclear weapons without getting anything in return," he said.

"I will not do it and the majority of the people in the party and in the country do not expect me to do it."

It was a thinly veiled threat to quit if he did not receive backing. But Kinnock also went over the heads of the executives to appeal directly to Labor's rank-and-file and the electorate at large.

Critics say the fundamental flaw in the new policy is that it forecloses its options by declaring nuclear weapons are "not a deterrent and of no practical use."

The rider is intended to appease the hard-line left. But it enables Tories to taunt Kinnock with the question, "Would you press the nuclear button?"

Unless it is answered with a straight yes, critics say the new policy is, in the words of Defense Secretary George Younger, "about as effective as a feather duster."

Man accused of helping Gaddafi

BOCHUM, West Germany — Police Wednesday arrested a West German businessman who has been accused of helping Libyan leader Moammer Gaddafi build a chemical-weapons factory at Rabta, Libya.

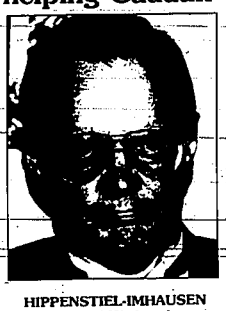

Dozens of police showed up at two offices of Imhausen-Chemie and arrested Juergen Hippenstiel-Imhausen on suspicion of violating West Germany's law on the export of arms.

A press spokesman at Imhausen-Chemie in the southwestern town of Lahr, Helmut Datz, said 20 to 25 federal police were combing through company files there.

Hippenstiel-Imhausen was arrested in Bochum in central Germany, at the offices of an Imhausen subsidiary. He had given up his post as managing director at the main company last month but remained managing director of the Bochum operation.

Senior prosecutor Holger Preisendanz told the German press agency DPA that Hippenstiel-Imhausen was involved "as a kind of chairman" in planning and building the Rabta factory for the Libyans.

Preisendanz said a magistrate had issued an arrest warrant for Hippenstiel-Imhausen Tuesday preparatory to charging him with violations of the export law.

Syrians blast Beirut palace

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syrian gunners blasted the presidential palace, army headquarters and the U.S. ambassador's residence with mortar fire Wednesday.

Gunmen stormed the central prison in Moslem west Beirut, freeing 189 convicts. A special squad of police, armed with M-16 assault rifles, recaptured 95 of them despite shellfire across the divided city, authorities said.

Police said 10 people were killed and 30 wounded in Wednesday's duels between the Christian army units of Gen. Michel Aoun and their Syrian and Druse militia foes.

That raised the overall toll to 337 people killed and 1,323 wounded since the latest round of fighting, believed to be the most destructive of Lebanon's 14-year-old civil war, erupted March 8.

Within an hour, 60 rounds, mostly 240mm mortars, struck the palace in the Christian suburb of Baabda and the nearby Defense Ministry in Yarze, where Aoun has his headquarters.

Only the Syrian army possesses such weapons in Lebanon.

"They've decided to demolish both facilities," a military spokesman said by telephone from underground shelters at the Defense Ministry.

"Our gunners are responding to silence the source of fire," he said, insisting on anonymity.

Aides said Aoun, 53, his wife and three daughters have been living in a shelter at the palace.

"Damage was considerable, but we cannot really give a more precise assessment because we have all been living in the bunker for four days," said an official at the presidential palace.

Panel OKs gambling casino for old cowboy

CARSON CITY, Nev. (AP) — A one-time rustler won a recommendation Wednesday for a renewed license for a tiny rural casino even though his cowboy ways have again put him at odds with strict government rules.

Jimmy Williams, 58, was recommended by the state Gaming Control Board for an 18-month license to run two slot machines and a blackjack table at the Golden Club in the isolated town of Austin in central Nevada.

Williams got a temporary license for the first time a year ago, after questions about his past which included a 10-month prison term in 1962 for rustling sheep. He also got a warning to adhere to tough gaming regulations.

At Wednesday's Control Board hearing, Chairman Bill Bible said Williams had closed down the club for remodeling without getting permission from the state, and then reopened after Bible had written to say he couldn't.

Williams said he didn't think the remodeling would take as long as it did. He added he called the Control Board about reopening and "they told me to go ahead and open up." But he couldn't recall who gave him the permission.

Board members also questioned Williams about his tax records, which include one year's report showing a taxable income of only $46. Williams said he has done a lot of bartering over the years, and his attorney backed him up.

The lawyer, Glade Hall, said Williams raises livestock for food and "if he wants a steak, he kills a cow." But Hall said he would encourage Williams to keep better financial records.

Board member Jerry Cunningham questioned Williams about his knowledge of gaming rules, and Williams conceded he didn't know what some of the terms meant.

Copies of gaming rules were mailed to Williams, but "they may have been used to light the wood-burning stove," quipped board member Dennis Amerine.

Jeri Woods, serving as bookkeeper at the club, said she was handling Williams' correspondence and making sure accounting standards were being met at the tiny club, which has the only live blackjack game for 65 miles.

Williams has had many conflicts over the years with brand inspectors, the Bureau of Land Management and other regulatory agencies. But he said he's getting along well these days with regulators and had assisted authorities in a probe into the rifle slaughter of hundreds of wild horses in central Nevada.

Man faces murder, dismemberment charges

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Robert Eugene Bennett was charged Wednesday with second-degree murder in the February slaying of a 51-year-old Salt Lake City man whose bullet-riddled body was dismembered.

Bud Ellett, chief deputy of the Salt Lake County attorney's justice division, said Bennett was charged in a complaint filed Wednesday in 3rd Circuit Court.

Meantime, authorities said an autopsy showed that Larry Duane White, whose severed legs were found in February, his torso Monday and his head Tuesday, had been shot five times.

Ellett said that in addition to filing the charge, punishable by five years to life in prison on conviction, they are seeking information about other disappearances.

White's head was found buried at a South Salt Lake residence once rented to Bennett, White's chess partner.

The head was found about 10 feet from where detectives on Monday night unearthed the torso, said Salt Lake County Sheriff Pete Hayward.

The head was wrapped in plastic and bound with tape. The victim's arms have not been found.

Bennett, 51, lived in the house from December to February.

Bennett, also known as Roy William Anderson, is in the Salt Lake County Jail awaiting trial on a federal Social Security fraud indictment.

Investigators believe White, a free-lance writer, was slain and his body mutilated, on Feb. 21, the day before his legs were found in a grocery store garbage container by a man looking for old lettuce for his rabbits.

An autopsy Tuesday found that White had been shot five times with a .38 caliber gun and then dismembered.

Bennett is thought to be the last person to have seen White alive. The two occasionally played chess together and both were scheduled to start work at a Salt Lake City telemarketing company the week that White disappeared.

Detectives began digging at the house after discovering soft ground in the yard. On Monday night, they found a torso, wrapped in plastic bag, wedged between a pipe and septic tank about 30 inches underground.

The torso and head were beneath slabs of concrete that detectives believe was poured to prevent the ground from collapsing as the body decomposed and possibly to also discourage anyone digging in the yard from continuing.

Detectives were led to the residence after discovering license plates that were stolen from a neighbor. The plates were found over the weekend by Salt Lake County detectives in Las Vegas, where Bennett was arrested April 6.

Also found in Las Vegas were some of White's identification cards, a post office box used by Bennett but registered under White's name and a .38-caliber revolver.

Since his arrest, Bennett has been questioned numerous times about White's death but has refused to talk.

Sandpoint rejects 2 bus service bids

SANDPOINT (AP) — The Sandpoint School Board has rejected bids from two bus contracting companies and has asked a citizen task force to look into other options for student transportation.

The board cited high costs when it voted Tuesday night not to accept either of two bids submitted last month. It was the second time in 14 months the district has rejected bids for bus service.

When it was proposed last year, contracting for service was a cheaper solution than replacing the district's aging bus fleet. But recent gasoline price increases and special contract language put that option out of reach, said Superintendent Ed Humble.

Gambling tax reduction pleases owners

SPOKANE (AP) — Tavern owners got what they wanted when Spokane County commissioners reduced the gambling tax from 5 percent to 4 percent on revenues from pulltabs, punchboards and fishbowls.

The commissioners also lowered the tax on bingo and raffles from 10 percent to 8 percent, after county finance director John Ogden recommended the reductions.

State law allows counties to collect only enough gambling tax revenue to police gambling activities, and Spokane County collected about $641,000 last year.

"It doesn't take between $500,000 and $600,000 to enforce gambling in Spokane County," said Bob Materne, president of the Spokane Tavern Owners' Association.

The tax reduction will mean $115,000 less revenue for the county next year.

Utahns favor fewer alcohol restrictions

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Of hundreds of responses to a questionnaire on alcohol availability in Utah, the "overwhelming majority" favor fewer restrictions but strict enforcement of the state's tough liquor laws, members of a task force said today.

The questionnaire, issued early in April, drew 377 responses by the May 3 deadline and 100 to 150 more by today's meeting, said Ken Wynn, a member of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Review Task Force.

Most respondents said Utah "should become more like other states" by eliminating minibottles and brown-bagging and permitting the sale of liquor by the drink, he said.

They also favored distribution of liquor licenses according to market demand and extension of the hours liquor legally can be sold, said Wynn, who also is director of the state Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control.

Similar responses came from the Utah Tavern Association, along with a petition signed by more than 1,800 people.

"While that sounds like a group of people that want free-flowing liquor and a bar on every corner ... they also wanted strict enforcement of liquor laws," he said.

The questionnaire was mailed to organizations involved with alcohol-related issues, published in Utah newspapers and broadcast on television and radio stations.

At present, liquor and wine are sold only in state-owned stores, while beer is sold in commercial outlets and taverns.

Members of private clubs can buy liquor by the drink, but drinks sold to patrons of licensed restaurants must be poured from mini-bottles, although they can be served at the tables.

In a response released today, the Mormon Church, which teaches abstinence from alcohol, urged the state to hold to most current laws, although officials favored a ban on advertising for all alcoholic beverages, including beer.

"Advertisements of alcoholic products, particularly those targeting youth, are often beguiling and totally ignore the tragic consequences of alcohol abuse in young human lives," said William S. Evans of the church's public affairs department.

The church also recommends "careful consideration be given to state control of beer," saying uncontrolled sales seem a paradox running counter to the principles of alcoholic beverage control laws.

Included on the survey were questions such as what principals should guide state control of alcohol; what limitations should be placed on the number of places it is sold and consumed; whether advertising should be limited; if state controls should be placed on beer sales, and if the respondents believed their views would be acceptable to most Utah residents.

It also included specific questions on whether passengers of limousines, "fun buses" and tour buses should be allowed to bring alcohol aboard and whether airports should be issued licenses allowing passengers to buy drinks from 8 a.m. until midnight without having to purchase a meal.

During the last Legislature, a bill had passed the House and was in the Senate to make "legal the long-standing practice of allowing liquor consumption in such hired vehicles.

A furor arose when, in the final hours of the session, church officials contacted some state senators to suggest the so-called "fun-bus bill" needed further study. The bill died without being considered, although many senators said it lacked support for passage even without the comments from the church officials.

Among the responses to the questionnaire, many handwritten, were comments such as, "Enough of this nonsense," by a writer calling for free liquor sales. Another said, "There is a limit to how much responsibility the state should retain for the actions of its constituents."

"Free enterprise is the rule of the land outside Utah," wrote another.

Police claim the Utah Jazz fuel heavier illegal betting

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Police say the popularity of the Utah Jazz has fueled an increase in illegal gambling on professional basketball as well as other sports.

But the bookies are the only people making money, said Detective Mike Julian of the Salt Lake County Sheriff's Office.

"Professional sports attract (gambling). Utah now has a Class A professional team with quality players recognized around the world, and that attracts people's urge to bet on games. Not just Jazz games but all games," said Julian.

It's not that the Jazz brought the bookies with them from New Orleans; Utah has had bookies as long as anyone can remember. Only with the Jazz, the bookies have a core of rabid fans much more willing to bet on the local favorites.

The typical bookie no longer conforms to the Hollywood image of a crusty hustler backed up by a scarfaced goon to collect the debts, Julian said.

"We've got a lot of those kind of bookies who work out of restaurants or bars," said Julian. "But just as much, they could be people in the hotel business, or the guy who runs the catering truck, or a cabbie, or a local stock broker."

Sports gambling ranks as one of the most common forms of gambling in Salt Lake County, detectives say. As a result, the sheriff's office has placed a high priority enforcing anti-vice laws.

"We get a lot of calls from wives whose husbands are losing maybe $100 a week the family can't afford," said Julian, "and the sheriff takes that very personal. He wants it stopped, and we spend a lot of money trying to do just that."

It hasn't been easy. Detectives say bookmaking operations are difficult to infiltrate, often taking from six months to two years to get on the inside.

Some are small "mom-and-pop" operations financed by local money; others are larger shops financed with outside money and potential links with organized crime.

But even that isn't anything like the stereotype popularized in movies. Gambling debts are collected, but mayhem is rare.

"People are threatened and occasionally someone might get beat up, but it's rare, Julian said.

The most common form of sports wagering is the "betting card," a 4-inch-wide, 12-inch-long card with a list of 20 to 30 professional and college games on tap for the week. Bets can be placed on any of them.

According to Julian, betting on basketball is common, but even more common is betting on football games, both professional and college. And there are literally dozens of different ways to wager on the games.

Senate panel examines Hanford plant and health

SPOKANE (AP) — A $15 million study of whether Hanford nuclear reservation operations affected human health is the subject of an investigation by a U.S. Senate committee headed by Sen. John Glenn.

The Hanford investigation, which is expected to include a secret 1949 intentional release of radiation, is part of a broader probe by the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee into the U.S. Department of Energy's radiation health-effects research programs, Glenn said in a statement Tuesday.

"For the past several years, my committee has had an active interest in this important area of study," the Ohio Democrat said. "Unfortunately, DOE's dual missions of nuclear promotion and assessing the health impacts of nuclear technologies continues to be the subject of considerable controversy."

In an April 17 letter to Energy Secretary James Watkins, Glenn expressed an interest in the Hanford Environmental Dose Reconstruction Project and a similar study at an Energy Department facility at Fernald, Ohio.

"The study is a five-year, $15 million effort to estimate how much of the heavy Hanford emissions in the 1940s and 50s actually reached people living nearby.

Hanford officials were informed several months ago that Glenn was considering the probe, said Karen Wheeless, an Energy Department spokeswoman at Richland.

The Hanford dose reconstruction project is conducted by Energy Department contractor Battelle Pacific Northwest Laboratory with oversight from an independent steering panel.

Glenn's committee will also study the 1949 "Green Run," an experiment that contaminated large portions of eastern Washington, state and Oregon. A recently declassified report conflicts with statements by the Energy Department in 1986 about the amount of radioactive iodine that was released.

Glenn's committee is also expected to look at a dose-reconstruction study at Fernald that recently was criticized for underestimating radiation releases, and the Energy Department's refusal to provide data on the health of its workers to independent scientists.

This raises "serious questions about how these studies are being conducted," Glenn's statement said.

"These studies have significant implications for public health and environmental policies," Glenn said. "It is essential that DOE's radiation health-effects research program not be the victim of a bureaucratic conflict-of-interest that continues to undermine public confidence in the federal nuclear program."

Ms. Wheeless said she expected Glenn's investigation to be "nothing but positive" regarding Hanford.

"I think an investigation will show that on dose reconstruction, we are trying to make an honest attempt to find out how the radiation releases from Hanford in the early days affected people," she said.

Influx of people overloads Jackson services

JACKSON, Wyo. (AP) — An influx of people to Jackson brought by what a human services official called the "Rocky Mountain Syndrome" is creating a strain on Teton County's human services system, according to the official.

Dr. Andrew Turner, of the Teton County Mental Health Center, told the Teton County Commission the area's healthy economy and scenery are leading to population increases that in turn increase daycare, social service and public health needs.

Turner said many of the new arrivals in Jackson are being drawn by the promise of prosperity and the area's scenery.

"In any community in Wyoming where there's a boom, you see a flux of people in that direction," he said. "Jackson has the added complication, if you want to call it that, of being a beautiful place to live. People have a lot of fantasies of living in Jackson."

The attraction is being referred to as the "Rocky Mountain Syndrome," Turner said.

"People think they're going to have some Rocky Mountain high if they can get to Jackson and live in Jackson," he said. "People around the state are getting the message that if their economy and their community dwindles, Jackson's is booming. People are more likely to move up here and when they get here, they're less likely to want to leave because if they can put roots down here, then it fulfills a separate dream of theirs to live in a really gorgeous place."

But once those moving to Jackson arrive, they frequently have problems finding housing and employment, he said.

Yellowstone tourism off to good start

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) — Early tourist visitation in Yellowstone National Park is running well ahead of last year's pre-fire pace even though most sections of the park opened later this year, officials say.

"It's looking very good," said park spokeswoman Sandra Robinson. "All indications are that visitation is definitely up."

Compared to the same period last year — when weather conditions were roughly the same — the number of visitors has increased 12 percent, she said.

During April, visitors through all gates totaled 25,515, up 2,769 visitors compared to 1988. This year's figures are still less than those of 1987, however, which had 33,344 visitors by this time.

This spring's figures are especially encouraging because most gates opened about a week later than last year, Robinson said.

"For us, this indicates a good trend," she said.

The total advanced reservations for groups and individuals with TW Services, the lodging concessionaire at Yellowstone, is slightly down compared to last year, Robinson said. However, reservations are even with those of 1987 and ahead of 1986, she added.

Robinson said it seems logical to attribute this year's early success to curiosity about last summer's fires that burned half of the park's 2.2 million acres. However, she said visitors have not yet been asked why they came to the park.

The fires have been the subject of the park's advertising campaigns in an effort to dispel fears that the entire park burned to the ground. Several interpretive exhibits are also being created to explain the natural fire process and its positive impacts on the environment and wildlife.

Market climbs during sluggish trading

The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Stock prices rose in lackluster trading Wednesday, with the Dow Jones industrial average rebounding from an eight-day losing streak.

Traders said the market drifted in a fairly narrow range for most of the session with little except the Treasury's $28.75 billion refunding to give the market direction.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials rose 3.12 points to finish at 2,374.45, ending an eight-day string of losses, the longest since August 1982. The blue-chip indicator had lost 47.66 points since April 28.

Advancing issues outnumbered declining ones by about 9 to 8 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 722 issues up, 641 down and 594 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board totaled 146 million shares, down from 150.09 million in the previous session. Market strategists said large investors remained reluctant to make commitments before the government provides new information on inflation and before the final outcome of the Treasury auction.

Traders are worried that the reports this week will show strong economic growth and higher inflation that will drive up interest rates.

A slight recovery in bond prices after the second round of the Treasury's quarterly borrowing failed to bring new players into the market.

On the first day of the sale Tuesday, stock and bond prices fell in response to what strategists called a disappointing response to the Treasury's sale of new debt. There was fear the Treasury would have to raise the interest offered on its fresh issues of notes to attract more buyers. A more favorable response by foreign investors produced only a brief upward blip.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE

BOBBY WOLFF

Dear Mr. Wolff:
Is there any upper limit to the strength promised by an unusual no-trump overcall?
Greater than Expectations, Albuquerque, N.M.

ANSWER: The main promise made is length in the minors. High-card strength is secondary (8-15 HCP). However, if one has too much defensive strength, the bid may backfire. Partner may well take a phantom sacrifice at five of a minor when you have enough defense to set a major-suit game.

Dear Mr. Wolff:
What's an easy-to-remember method of coping with enemy interference of our Blackwood?
Pesky Opponents, Houston, Texas

ANSWER: There are several ways to do this, but the simplest is DPPO. (The acronym stands for Double equals Penalty, Pass equals 0 aces, next suit equals one ace, etc.)

Dear Mr. Wolff:
What method do you recommend as a defense against weak two-bids?
Pre-empted Often, Fort Worth, Texas

ANSWER: Use essentially the same defense as you use against one-bids, paying closer attention to vulnerability conditions and the level of the pre-empt. For example, a takeout double of two diamonds may promise less strength than a takeout double of two spades.

Dear Mr. Wolff:
When does a revoke become established? If I catch my error before I play to the next trick, do I escape the revoke penalty?
Red-Handed, Torrance, Calif.

ANSWER: Not necessarily. A revoke becomes established whenever either member of the offending side plays to the subsequent trick.

Dear Mr. Wolff:
My friend claims he gets dealt bad cards more often than not. Is there any such animal as a jinxed card-holder?
Non-Believer, Dayton, Ohio

ANSWER: There are many players who think they are that unlucky, but it cannot be true over the long haul. There's no doubt that they think they get bad cards, but that's usually because these players are incurable pessimists or in the throes of a bad streak. Everyone has good and bad streaks; the bad streaks are not a life sentence.

THE ACES ON BRIDGE — BOBBY WOLFF

"The only difference between a caprice and a lifelong passion is that the caprice lasts a little longer."
— Oscar Wilde.

Study West's opening lead and East's play to trick two. Is South's play to the second trick automatic or is it time to consider another option?

East wins the first trick with his ace and returns the jack. What do you know about the hand thus far?

If you don't take the time to answer that question, up goes your diamond king and West ruffs. Back comes a club through dummy's A-Q, and it's too late to make the game. The defenders get two diamonds, a ruff and the king of clubs for one down.

Consider the play of the diamond suit at tricks one and two. When East wins the ace and returns the jack, West's lead of the seven can be from only two original holdings: Q-9-7 or a singleton seven. (With Q-7 or 9-7, he would have led the top of a doubleton.) Which holding is more likely? Surely the singleton seven.

Therefore, South should duck at trick two. East continues with the nine, which West ruffs, but the club return doesn't hurt. Dummy's ace wins, a fourth diamond is ruffed high, and trumps fall in one round. South's low club goes on dummy's fifth diamond, and the defenders are held to only three tricks.
